to the work to be done. Suppose, for example, several radiators, previously in use, are suddenly shut off, causing much less demand for steam. An excess of supply would immediately follow, with waste of fuel and other inconveniences, but immediately the draft closes owing to the pressure upon the lever at F, the fire failing to get a supply of air declines at once, and with it the steam.

8. The Safety-valve (1) is so constructed as to make no noise if steam should blow through it. To avoid the very common accident of adhesion between the valve and its seat, it will be observed that the lever is so arranged with reference to the water-column, that the float (H) bears upon the long end of the lever and raises it whenever the limiting pressure of the steam has been in the least exceeded. The escape-pipe from the safety-valve takes the steam blown off to a condensing cess-pool underground. In practice, the boiler actually blows off steam so seldom that this part of the apparatus might be safely dispensed with. But it is thought prudent to retain it.

THE DISTRIBUTION OF STEAM.

9. Wrought-iron pipes, K K, laid at a suitable angle and of ample size to carry back the drip, convey the steam to the radiators. If it is preferred to receive the warm air through registers, as in the common hot air furnaces, this is as readily accomplished as in any ordinary furnace, but except so far as may be requisite for securing an efficient ventilation, this plan is not recommended.

10. The Radiators are placed wherever convenience dictates. They are of several kinds. The plain radiator, seen in Plate II, is formed of two sheets of wrought-iron, one surface is flat and the other is indented by concave depressions, at the bottom of which the two plates are riveted fast. The edges are folded over a hempen cord to a steam tight joint. The japanned surface is decorated with tasteful designs, and several seasons of experience show that there is no deterioration from rust, within or without, either in summer or winter. The same construction of radiators is adopted in all the forms. The ornamental screens are of various patterns, similar to Plate III, and are covered by slabs of marble. Mantles, like Plate IV, afford a very desirable form for covering the radiators, which are thus made to occupy a time-honored position for a source of heat.

11. The steam is admitted to the radiators by the large steam-cock A, at the base, and the air contained in the radiator escapes at the small air-cock, (C,) Plate II. By regulating the quantity of air allowed to escape, any portion or the whole of the surface of the radiator is brought into action, thus allowing of easy regulation of the heat for variations of external temperature. If at any time too much surface has been brought into action, by closing the steam-cock and opening the air-key, the radiators are immediately cooled and the temperature readily regulated.

ADVANTAGES OF THIS HEAT.

12. (a.) It is radiant heat, warming the person like the rays of an open fire even at some distance. (b.) The air never comes in contact with any surface heated above boiling water, (212° F.) and consequently the invisible particles of dust, always afloat in the air, never become burned to give that peculiar oppressive and unwholesome atmosphere so common with hot-air furnaces. (c.) It is free from dust and does not crack furniture or parch the skin. (d.) It effects a remarkably even distribution of heat, and is wholly unaffected by changes in or violence of the wind. (e.) It may be taken without loss or difficulty to the remotest wing of an irregular house, and will there do its work as fully as in any other position. This advantage cannot otherwise be obtained. (f.) It is noiseless, and makes itself felt without loss of time. (g.) Finally, the whole apparatus is perfectly automatic or self-regulating, and will do more work from a given weight of coal than any heating apparatus now in use.

Steam Heating

APPARATUS.

The proprietor of this Apparatus for

WARMING HOUSES, CHURCHES, STORES & FACTORIES,

would call the attention of the public to the preceding Illustrations with explanations of the same, from the pen of Prof. BENJAMIN SILLIMAN, Jr.

This Apparatus has now been in use for the past two or three years, and gives perfect satisfaction to all who have made trial of the same. Although the first cost of the Apparatus is somewhat larger than the ordinary methods of heating, yet in the end it will prove and be found to answer the purposes for which it is intended, far better than any apparatus now in use.

Orders are solicited, and will be promptly answered.

COUGHS AND COLDS.

A cheap and effective medicine to cure a cough, is a desideratum. Such an one has been discovered by a veteran and successful physician, whom of faithful use of it convinced of its exceeding usefulness, in all cases of coughs, whether acute or chronic. He says: I have known the most inveterate cough to be relieved after a week's trial of this

COUGH POWDER.

The best of it is, that it is very cheap, and can be sent by mail to every part of the Union for an extra three cent stamp.

The medicine is a POWDER, and is entirely free from every preparation, and does not exceed three grains in weight. Three of these powders often produce the most astonishing results, and "I have rarely known a case so stubborn," says the discoverer of this

Mineral or Poisonous

WONDERFUL MEDICINE,

"unless the lungs were badly ulcerated, that did not yield before the twelfth trial."

The proprietor, desirous that the world should have the benefit of this

INTRODUCTORY.

IN offering this first Number of THE ILLUSTRATED GAZETTEER AND BUSINESS BOOK OF CONNECTICUT, our first words, we are sorry to say, must be those of apology. We had hoped and intended to have issued this, our first number, in the month of July, but unforeseen and uncontrollable circumstances have prevented.

If the public sustain us in our work we intend to continue our History in annual chapters, down to the present time.

Our Portraits and Biographies speak for themselves.

Our Business Directory is believed to be the fullest and most correct that has ever been issued in the State.

Our Miscellaneous Department is not so complete as we intend it to be hereafter.

Such a work as this, involving so much labor and such extensive research, must necessarily embrace some imperfections. Our succeeding volumes, we are determined shall exhibit a decided improvement on the present one, and we shall spare no pains to make them perfectly reliable.

* * We will thank any one who may detect errors or discrepancies in this volume, to send us their corrections.

PICTORIAL HISTORY OF CONNECTICUT.

CHAPTER I.

THE geographical area of Connecticut is much less than that of any of the New England States, except its sister State of Rhode Island. But its political, commercial and mechanical importance is scarcely less than that of any other State, unless we except Massachusetts. A man's might is estimated by his deeds, and if we consider the part Connecticut has borne in the history of this great nation, we must award it a high place in the scale of States. In the great struggle for national existence, and afterward for national freedom, Connecticut bore a most conspicuous part, and her children may point with pride to the history of her noble acts, her generous sacrifices, her stern and unwavering devotion, her enlarged charities, her manly men and Christian women. This we shall see and confess, as point after point in its history is unfolded in this series of papers.

We propose to write a concise and faithful history of the State, commencing with its first settlement by the whites, to continue as long as we may be permitted and encouraged to issue our Annual Gazetteer.

A little more than two centuries since, the fair domain of this important fraction of our great country was a WILDERNESS, occupied by the aboriginal proprietors and savage beasts of prey. The Red Man, in company with the Bear, Panther, Wolf, Wildecat, Fox, Raccoon, etc. etc., prowled over its rough surface, subject to no law but might. The beautiful rivers, bays and harbors of this fine region were ploughed by no keel and whitened by no sail. The hum of commerce, the sound of the woodman's axe, the hammer of the busy mechanic, the buzz and clatter of the manufacturer's spindles, the whizz and roar of the steam engine, the scream of the locomotive whistle, and the rumble of heavy trains of cars on their iron track, bearing their ten thousands of intelligent travelers, and their precious burdens of freight, disturbed none of the sleeping echoes of hill and valley so beautifully dispersed over its unreclaimed surface. Churches, consecrated to the service of the only true God, there were none, and the ten thousand school houses and family altars were not yet reared. As it had been from the creation, so up to the period of its first visitation by the Mayflower and its heroic band of men and women, it was the wild home of barbarous tribes of Indians, who gleaned an uncertain subsistence by the use of their bows and arrows and the rudest attempts at agriculture, of which the whole product was a scanty supply of Indian maize and beans. The Pequots, the Quinnipiacs, the Tunxis, the Hammonassetts, the Mohegans, with some others, were the principal tribes inhabiting the whole territory of our State. A race of men shrewd, cunning, artful in the chase and war, cruel to their enemies and generous to their friends, improvident and ignorant of all those arts which give glory to a nation and prowess to its arms—a race fast perishing from the face of the earth by their own indolence and inertness, as well as the unerring law of Him who ruleth over all.

ITS OCCUPATION BY THE WHITES.

Such was the country and the race inhabiting it when the Forefathers, guided by the hand of Providence, landed on its shores and took possession of its fair and fruitful realm.

As soon as the news of the actual settlements at Plymouth, Strawberry Bank, (Salem,) and Shawmut, (Boston,) had reached the mother country, the tide of emigration to the New World set in with renewed vigor, and soon thousands were on their way to the Western Hemisphere. Various motives induced this emigration. Some were moved by expectations of sudden and easily acquired wealth; some were ambitious of power in the New World; some crossed the ocean to escape poverty and a debtor's prison or a felon's doom; and many came in search of “Freedom to worship God.”

On reaching our shores, these emigrants spread themselves abroad over the face of the country in search of some desirable spot on which to pitch their tent and establish a home. The rich and fertile lands, watered by the beautiful Connecticut and washed by the waves of Long Island Sound, early attracted the attention of these pioneers, and extravagant stories of the beauty of the country, the fertility of the soil, the salubrity of the climate and capacity of its waters, were speedily borne to the mother colonies and the mother country, and a scramble was made for the more promising localities. Parties of settlers from the Massachusetts colonies early took possession of the fairest and most available points of Connecticut, and commenced those labors which have carried the State to its present high grade of religious, commercial and political prosperity.

But before we proceed with the civilized history of our State, we propose to give some account of its original occupants.

THEIR ORIGIN.

Various opinions have attained respecting the origin of the Aborigines of this country. As any mere speculation is unreliable, I will not waste time in the repetition, or give my speculations with regard to the various views held by antiquarians and historians in reference to this unimportant matter. It is enough for you and me, dear reader, to take the original occupants of our State as the earlier settlers found them. Nor will it answer for me in these brief memoirs to attempt anything like a full and minute Indian history of Connecticut, as it would swell my work to an unwieldly bulk. The history of the North American Indians has been written with great care and particularity by men whose love for antiquarian research has abundantly fitted them for the task, and whose truthfulness of character warrants us in accepting their productions with the most perfect confidence. I will only mention here a few works, and to which I am happy to acknowledge my indebtedness for much of the material of this portion of my history, viz: "Winslow's Outline," "Drake's Book of the Indians of North America," "History of the Indians of Connecticut, by John W. DeForest," and "Hollister's History of Connecticut." Without more preface, then, let me proceed at once to the consideration of the condition and character of the Connecticut Indians, as Gov. Winslow found them at his early coming to this colony.

PERSONAL APPEARANCE.

Except in cases of deformity, which were exceedingly rare among the New England tribes, the personal appearance of our Indians was imposing and attractive. His figure was fine, his carriage erect, and his movements gave evidence of immense muscular power, combined with great suppleness and agility. His copper-colored complexion was strongly set off with eyes of a dark hue, set wide apart in the head, hair of jet swinging in long heavy braids from the top of the head, or gathered and confined with eagle's feathers or porcupine's quills, gayly and fantastically colored with those bright and varied hues, for which they were so famous; high cheek bones protruding on either side of a coarse broad nose, finishing off with a wide sensual mouth. The females were far less attractive, being short and "dumpy," with coarser features than the males.

The male Indian was complete lord of his family, and the female was made to drudge and toil in all the severer labors of the household and agriculture. His vocation was to hunt, and wage war upon the enemies of his tribe, her's to prepare the fruits of the chase, to till the ground and gather the scanty crops produced by their thriftless husbandry, and to care for the wigwam and the fast coming papposes.

HUNTING.

We have alluded to the hunt. With the Indian, hunting amounted to a passion. Lazy to a proverb, and ever ready to shirk any physical exercise which was not impelled either by the chase or war, in both these he exhibited an energy which no obstacle could subdue and no difficulty overcome. He would tramp through the trackless forests day after day in the severest weather, with no thought of fatigue, enduring hunger almost to the point of starvation without one word of murmuring or complaint. A scalp or a bear in prospect, awakened all his energy, and the acquisition of either was enough amply to repay him for all his toil and suffering.

The weapons used in the chase and in war were exceedingly simple and few in number. The principal of these was the bow and arrow: and although in the effeminate hands of civilization it is by no means a powerful weapon, yet when used by an expert savage it was no mean instrument of destruction. Nothing was more common than to send an arrow "clean through" a bear or even buffalo at the distance of fifty yards. Their bows were made, for the most part, from the wood of the hickory tree, and were from three to even eight feet in length, although these last were the exceptions. The bow was strung with the cured intestines of the various wild animals which fell a prey to their weapons. Their arrows were generally composed of reeds or some light wood, and were armed at the point with a head of flint or some other hard stone, curiously and elaborately fashioned by the simple process of hammering between two hard stones, while the tail of the shaft was provided with a feather to serve as a rudder and keep it steady on its death course from the bow. Great was the pride and glory of the bow, and he was not thought fit to assume the position of a warrior until he could "string a bow" which would utterly mock the efforts of the most stalwart arm of the civilized pale face.

Besides the bow, next in importance was the spear, or lance. This was not common with all the tribes of Indians, but among those tribes where it was in use it became a weapon of great efficiency. Next in utility was the hatchet, or tomahawk, in the use of which the savage attained wonderful dexterity. It is related of Gen. Putnam, a son of Connecticut, that in a certain battle in which he was engaged, he was taken prisoner and bound to a tree until the close of the fight. Pending the action he was discovered by a young warrior who seemed to be bent more on sport than revenge, and who immediately commenced practicing his skill in throwing the tomahawk, making a target of the prisoner's head. Taking his stand at a fair distance from his mark he brandished his deadly instrument above his head and sent it hurling through the air. As he saw the fatal axe gleaming in the sunshine, Putnam thought that his time had come, and uttering a hasty prayer resigned himself to his fate. The hatchet half buried itself in the tree close beside his head, when the young savage, with a fiendish exultation at his success, released his tomahawk and took his stand for another trial, in which the fatal iron buried itself in the tree closely on the other side of the victim. In this way he made some dozen trials, and then left the General bound as he had found him, and hastened to join his brethren in the fray.

The war club and scalping-knife were no unimportant weapons in either the hunt or the battle. The club served to finish the murderous work of the bow, and the knife to skin the prey, or scalp the fallen enemy. These were the weapons, few and simple, with which the Indians were armed. Upon the skillful use of these depended in a great measure the subsistence of their families, and their success in the wars so often and cruelly waged against their enemies.

In the hunt, the Indians resorted to much craft and cunning in approaching their prey. It will at once be seen that it was important to approach much nearer to the animal of which they were in pursuit, than if they held in their hand the far-reaching rifle. For this reason they resorted to many arts that they might come within bow shot of their victim. Sometimes they hid themselves in the thick copses which abounded in the country, or in the long rank grass, awaiting patiently many an anxious hour for the approach of the animal to some favorite haunt or ford; sometimes they would cover themselves with the skin of a wild beast, and bow in hand would creep on all fours by a circuitous route to the spot where the animal was browsing or sunning himself on the warm side of some abrupt hillock, and the first intimation of the approach of his mortal foe was the sharp agony in his vitals while the death-shaft sped through them.

For the lesser animals the Indian resorted to traps. These were of various and ingenious construction. Sometimes a deep pit was dug in the soft earth, the bottom of which was studded with very sharp stakes, and covered over with a light basket-work of sticks and leaves, over which the dirt was strewn to hide it from the animal's view. Sometimes a snare was laid by bending down a stout sapling and securing it so slightly that in crossing it the animal was sure to release the fastening and generally find himself swinging high in air, where he speedily expired. Another mode was to place a large stone on a figure 4 with a tempting bait, so that as soon as the ravenous beast should seize upon it the support of the stone should give way and it would fall upon and crush the unthinking meddler.

As a general rule the Indian pursued his hunting alone, but sometimes they hunted in large parties, taking with them their whole household force, excepting the very aged and the sick. These were famous occasions and were preceded by great preparations and festivities. They generally occurred in the months of October and November. For weeks previous to the setting out of the tribe—for hundreds often accompanied the hunting parties—the note of preparation and revelry were heard in every wigwam. Bows and arrows, spears, traps, snares, fishing tackle, etc., were provided in the greatest profusion, and before they set off a grand hunting dance was performed with every attendant ceremony. The warriors were decked in their richest attire and painted in their gaudiest hues, the powwows were there with their everlasting drum, and the whole proceedings betokened as great earnestness and solemnity as if an important battle were about to be fought, and on which depended the very existence of the tribe. The most violent gesticulations shadowed forth the various duties of the chase, terrible screeches and unearthly groans represented the dying agonies of the victims and the triumphant shouts of the victors. Knives were brandished and tomahawks were swung high in the air, arrows were shot at distant targets or a harmless tree, the ground was torn up by the hands of the half crazed savages and thrown over the heads of the whole throng.

All things being ready, they started for the distant hunting ground, sometimes sixty or even an hundred miles distant from their homes, taking with them their wives and children. The grounds had been selected and marked during the previous summer by experienced hunters who had been sent out by the tribe for that purpose. They set off with much merriment and shouts of laughter, each boasting to the other of the great exploits he would perform during the hunt. Two or three days brought them to the selected grounds. Each man now elected his separate site, the sachems and the aged warriors having the precedence in the selection. Then each for himself and his family erected a rude booth for his temporary residence, of such materials as were at hand, generally of the boughs of evergreen trees. The floor was thickly covered with dry leaves or withered grass. The camp kettle was suspended from a pole resting on two crotched stakes driven into the ground a little distance from the hut. The next thing to be attended to was to mark the tracks and trails of the various wild animals and to set traps for the lesser, such as the otter, beaver, raccoon, fox, rabbit, squirrel, turkey, pigeon, partridge, quail, etc., etc. The larger animals, as the deer, bear, wolf, panther, etc., were waylaid and shot from ambush, the Indian discovering exceeding sagacity in concealing his presence and approaching the game.

When the snows began to fall the scattered families were collected together, and the treasures of dried meat, which had been cured by the squaws during the hunt, were shouldered by every one capable of bearing a load, when they all started for home once more. If there was more meat than could be carried, it was safely buried and secured from the wolves, where it was soon after found and brought safely home by a commission despatched immediately therefor on reaching the so long deserted village. With economy, they generally secured meat enough upon these hunts to last them quite through the winter. But this was a virtue little known and seldom cultivated by the Aborigines. Wasteful to a proverb, they riotously feasted until the provisions disappeared, and then submitted to the pangs of famine as best they might through the long and pinching weeks of winter.

Fish were taken then precisely as they are taken now, viz : by seine, spear, and hook and line. True, the tackle of the Indian was rude, and consequently comparatively inefficient ; but they nevertheless contrived to secure a fair supply from the finny occupants of the rivers and bays with which their beautiful country was so freely indented and slashed. Their seines were simple hand scoops which required great skill and care. Their spears were made with a single point like a lance, headed with some hard substance, either of bone or stone, with a barb to hold the animal. These the Indians used with great dexterity, throwing them from the prow of their frail canoe, over which protruded a bundle of pitch sticks split finely and bound together with thongs or withes, lighted at one end, and whose light clearly revealed the position of the victim, as he lay unsuspectingly on the bed of the river or creek. Their hooks were generally composed of two small bones, lashed together with a fine sinew, with a barb similar to those seen on our own fish-hooks. Their lines were made of a fine grass, curiously twisted or braided.

Thus provided, the Indian supplied his daily necessities, and but for his inordinate love of ease and illimitable prodigality, might easily have laid by ample stores for the long and severe winters which in those early times were almost sure to reign in this inhospitable climate. But such was the improvidence of these simple sons of the forest, that want and hunger were almost sure attendants upon every winter-wigwam, and sometimes starvation and death. And while we are upon the sumptuary of the Aborigines, we may as well consider briefly their

AGRICULTURE.

With the rich alluvial bottoms of the rivers and the strong soil of the hill sides, the present occupants of Connecticut contrive to make the harvest an ingathering of plenty, and the horn of her agriculture is nearly always full. But with the unthrifty tilth of the Aborigines, the result was a meager and pitiful harvest. A few bushels of maize, a few pecks of white beans, and a little larger supply of tobacco, to each family, was the whole tale of the annual ingathering of their crops. The consequence of this improvidence was much real suffering from hunger during the long winter months, for which they had so scantily provided.

The implements of husbandry were even less efficient and fewer in number, than those of the chase. They had neither plow, nor harrow, nor seythe, nor sickle, nor any other tool than a coarse dibble, a kind of wooden spade, and a rude imitation of a hoe, made from a huge oyster shell, with a short rough stick attached to it. With these they cleared the land and prepared it for the seed, after which nothing more was done until the time to gather the diminutive crops had arrived.

The men did not degrade themselves to the toils of the field. To this hard drudgery they compelled the women, who performed all the severe labors of the field and the wigwam. There were, however, two exceptions to this rule. When a family had decided to break up a new patch of ground the whole neighborhood were summoned together, and frequently there might be seen a hundred or even more, men and women, all busily engaged with their rude spades and hoes, tearing up the turf, grubbing out the roots, and making the time pass merrily with their gibes and jokes, occasionally cheered by an extempore recitative, led by some chief, to every sentence of which all the warriors and squaws responded with a grunt. This generally was descriptive of some battle or hunting scene in which the singer or his superior sachem had taken a personal share, or prophetic of some more daring feat in which he was to engage in some premeditated foray on an inimical tribe. Sometimes, however, their humdrum songs partook of a more pastoral character, and set forth the glories of harvest home and the domestic happiness of the wigwam and the home circle. The whole scene usually wound up with a grand feast and a propitiary dance to the harvest spirit, not unfrequently terminating with a bloody fight.

The other occasion was in the gathering and curing the scanty tobacco crop. This they did not allow their women to touch. Whether this was the result of some superstition, or a high sense of the dignity of the pipe and its sacred uses, the writer does not pretend to know, and leaves it for each reader to settle for himself, as he may best judge from the premises.

DWELLINGS AND FURNITURE.

The houses of the New England and Canada Indians were far superior in their construction to those of the Western and Southern Aborigines. This fact is to be accounted for in the difference of climate. In the more inhospitable regions of the North, the savages were driven by the severity of the winters to seek to render their habitations more impervious to the winds and pelting storms and sifting snows. Many of the Western and Southern tribes sleep and dwell in the open air for a great portion of the year, and when they are driven to seek a roof for shelter, simply set a half dozen straight poles tied together at the top and spread widely apart on the ground, around which rude mats or skins of wild animals are loosely drawn. In the center of this rude tent a fire is built, the smoke of which escapes through a corresponding aperture in the top. Here they cook and make their clothing and implements of the chase or husbandry during the day, and when night comes on, arrange themselves around the fire on the ground which is strewn with leaves and dried grass, covered with mats or skins, their feet towards the fire, and their heads forming a large circle near the outside circumference of the tent.

The New England tribes, however, according to Gookin, one of the earliest and most observing historians of this wild branch of the human family, had learned from their necessities to construct much more comfortable dwellings than their Western brethren. When an Indian family had resolved upon the erection of a habitation, the first thing to be done was to select a suitable site. This was usually near some village—for these nomads were quite gregarious in their habits—also, nigh unto some desirable fishing ground, or in the center of some rich alluvial plain or meadow, where the earth was easily tilled. One other consideration always entered largely into their calculations—a sheltered position with a sunny aspect. The site having been decided, the next thing to be done was to cut and drag to the spot a few dozen saplings, generally of the white birch, unstripped of any of their limbs. These were set in the ground in close connexion in four rows, forming an oblong square; the size of which depended on the means of the builder and the number of the household. The bushy tops of these saplings were now brought together and woven and braided firmly together. The interstices were then filled with twigs and moss and clay until the walls and roof of these primitive dwellings were quite impervious to the cold. The roofs were often covered with birch or hemlock bark, so as to resist the most severe storms of rain. They were sometimes of great size; some of them belonging to the sachems were a hundred feet long by fifty feet in breadth. The ordinary size, however, was from thirty to forty feet long by from fifteen to thirty feet wide. The fire was built on a pile of stones in the center of the hut, the smoke escaping through an opening in the top. The entrance, which was low and small, was secured in extreme weather by hanging a mat before it. In mild weather the cooking was done out of doors, but when this was impracticable, it was performed at the wigwam fire, around which ranged the warriors, lazily smoking their pipes or fashioning their bows and arrows, tomahawks, pipes, knives or spears. Over the fire a pole was laid on two crotched stakes set firmly in the ground, from which they suspended their meats upon a string. Water was heated in shallow earthen vessels, of which we shall have occasion presently to speak.

Gookin, who spent much time with the Indians, prior to 1680, declares that many of their wigwams were as comfortable in the cold nights of those long and bitter winters, as the best houses of the Colonists.

Having erected their dwellings, the next thing was to furnish them. This was a simple matter, compared with the fitting up of a modern house. In advance of their Southern brethren, they had attained the luxury of bedsteads, which were formed by driving crotched stakes in the ground, near the corner of the hut, across which poles were laid interlaced with small boughs and strips of bark, forming a kind of thick network. On this was laid a thick coat of leaves or dried grass, which was overlaid with mats or skins. This was the prominent piece of furniture, the rest were simple enough. No chairs, or stools even, no table, no knives or forks, no plates or spoons, and no cooking utensils except the earthen kettle above alluded to, pails made from birch bark, bowls of the pepperage wood, and huge wooden ladles holding from a pint to a quart, carved neatly from the straight grained birch or maple. Besides these were a great variety of baskets, woven from the splints of the ash tree, holding from a half pint to a half dozen bushels. Many of them were really beautiful, being fantastically colored with the brilliant dyes for which the makers were so famous. They displayed also, considerable ingenuity in the manufacture of their cooking utensils and bowls; some of these were of considerable size, holding several gallons. The pots were composed of clay mixed with fine sharp sand, dried in the sun and baked in the fire; shaped somewhat like a deep earthen bowl. The wooden bowls, as we have said, were carved out of the huge knots of the pepperage tree, and being extremely hard and tough, must have cost the maker a great deal of patient toil. They were sometimes circular, sometimes oblong, and sometimes trefoil, according to the original shape of the knot. A few of these relics are still preserved with great care. In the rooms of the Historical Society at Hartford, are several of these remnants of that race which has so long been swept from the face of the country, over which for so many generations they held undisputed sway. The author of "The History of the Indians of Connecticut," declares, in that excellent work, that he has seen at Norwich, two bowls, each holding about three pints, said to have once formed a part of the household stuff of the great sachem Uncas. One of these bowls is round and is adorned with a handle carved to represent the head of an owl, the other of an oblong shape, with two handles resembling the heads of dogs, facing each other.

HOW THEY DRESSED.

Although when leading an idle life the Indian was exceedingly negligent of his dress, yet he was punctilious and even fastidious in the item of his wardrobe, on all occasions of state and parade. In warm weather they were not overburdened with clothing. The children ran about in a perfect state of nature until they were eight or ten years of age, when a very scanty pattern of an apron sufficed. At ten or twelve the females were supplied with a breech cloth, which they wore until marriage, when they assumed the leather under shirt coming up over the breast and shoulders and fastened with a belt round the waist. This garment generally reached to the hips, and was open in front, the edges and border sometimes ornamented with a fringe of leather and dried porcupine quills. Over this they wore a skirt of the same material, often embroidered with many colored quills, and fastened at the waist and reaching nearly to the feet. The belt often exhibited much ingenious skill, and was made valuable by the addition of beads manufactured from the colored parts of the clam and oyster shells. A circlet of a similar kind was fastened round their brows, securing their lank hair from falling about their face, leaving it to fall in ungraceful tangles far down behind. In summer the men usually went naked, save a narrow apron fastened round the loins by a leather thong. In cold weather they wore tight fitting leather breeches, usually made from the skin of the deer, and colored by a yellow earth, so as to assume a buff color. Down upon the outside of each leg ran a fringe of leather, sometimes ornamented with beads or porcupine quills. On the feet were worn moccasins made from the heavier parts of the bear skin, and ornamented in the same manner. Above all, was worn a leather cloak or shawl, ornamented according to the taste of the wearer, sometimes by a rude picture of a battle in which the warrior had figured, sometimes a hunting scene, and sometimes figures of beasts and birds, and all manner of creeping things. Across the shoulders, when going forth to battle or the chase, were slung the never forsaken bow and its full quiver of arrows, while sticking from the belt at the waist might be seen the handle of the scalping knife and the slender stem of the habitual pipe. But the head gear of the Indian craved most of his attention and called forth all his ingenuity. Sometimes the whole head was kept closely shaven, except a small tuft on the crown. This was kept constantly filled with bear's grease—in this respect occupying the same point of civilization with our modern belles—and trained to a luxurious length. This was often braided and coiled and looped up on the top of the head and stuck full of the quills before spoken of, and ornamented with a bunch of eagle's quills, sometimes dyed, sometimes retaining their original color; or a string of wampum, the ends of which fell gracefully down his shoulders. Sometimes the preserved head of a fox, or even a wolf or bear, with the teeth grinning in all their ferocious naturalness, would take the place of the plume of eagle's feathers, giving a peculiarly savage aspect to its wearer. On all occasions of war, or diplomatic intercourse with other tribes, the warriors painted their faces and heads in the most fantastic and hideous manner, until they were perfectly frightful to look upon. For ornaments, the women often wore bracelets and anklets, curiously manufactured from the bones of small animals, birds and fishes, or the purple centers of the oyster shell, curiously dyed, and so constructed that a tinkling or rattling sound escaped when the wearer walked or danced. On especial occasions, as on the death of some member of the family, or the birth of an infant, or the marriage of a daughter, the squaws decorated themselves with a mantle wrought from the skins of beautiful birds, so that the feathers appeared in their natural condition, exhibiting all the varied hues of the sunny songsters, whose lives were thus forfeited to the caprices of the Indian maidens and matrons. They were far more profuse with paint than the men, who rarely painted themselves, except on the occasions above alluded to. The women colored their hair also, with red and yellow ocher, and plentifully rubbed in with a profusion of bear's grease.

AMUSEMENTS.

The Indians have been called a taciturn race, but they are by no means averse to a frolicsome mood occasionally. It ill consorts with their ideas of dignity, to make the slightest exhibition of levity when any topic of weighty interest is under consideration, or any grave matter is in hand; but in the hours of relaxation they unbend like children and give way to the most exuberant and boisterous mirth. As they enter upon war or the chase with all the ardor of their wild nature, so they carry into their amusements the same hearty zeal and devotion. Like all other savage, as well as civilized nations, the Aborigines of Connecticut had a variety of games, into which all entered—games alike of skill and of chance. The former of these were engaged in from the mere desire of exhibiting their strength and skill, the latter were used only for gambling purposes, a passion for which seems to have been inherent in the race.

A game somewhat similar to that of cards, was played with pieces of rushes of unequal lengths and divers colors. Dice were not unknown to them. They were formed of stones, three, four, or even five sided, with marks of value on each side. They were thrown from the hand upon a smooth place upon the ground. On the turn of these magical bits of stone were often hazarded the entire fortune of the players, and great was the rejoicing of the winner and his friends, while the losing party were exceedingly chagrined and disheartened. Sometimes the despondency of the victim was so deep and permanent as to lead to suicide. Foot ball was another favorite pastime with these simple sons of the forest, and into which game they carried all the enthusiasm of their nature. The game is ever an exciting one, and with them often resulted in a regular fight, sometimes ending in bloody heads and even death.

DANCES.

But of all the amusements among the Aborigines none was so exciting as the various dances observed among them. Some of these were stated and periodical, others merely occasional. Some were ceremonial, others were merely for the purposes of sport. Of the first mentioned were the planting and harvest dances; the one a solemn invocation to their gods to avert calamity and grant a favorable issue to their husbandry, the other a joyous, exultant thanksgiving to the god of the harvest, for the abundant crops and for the plentiful supply of game and fish. Of the next class were the powwows of the medicine men to avert sickness or to heal it. Of this we shall speak more at length, under the head of "Diseases, etc."

Among the ceremonial dances, were those preparatory to the hunt, or on going forth to war. Of the former of these we have already spoken, under our hunting head. The war dances were the grand ceremonies of the nation. These were upon the occasion of going forth to battle, and the celebration of victories achieved. Great and solemn were the preparations for war. When a tribe had resolved to wage war upon another tribe, the warriors met in secret council to discuss the probabilities of success. If these were at all doubtful, trusty messengers were despatched to some neighboring and friendly tribe with propositions to join them in the campaign. The utmost pains were taken to keep the whole matter a profound secret. Spies were sent out to examine all the passes to the enemy's country, and to ascertain if possible the numerical force of the enemy and their exact condition.

Great preparations for the coming contest went on at home. An abundant supply of bows and arrows, tomahawks and scalping knives, were provided, and for weeks before setting forth, the young warriors underwent a vigorous discipline and drill in the arts of their savage warfare.

At length, when everything was in readiness for the march, the warriors, young and old, assembled in the public square of the village, for the purpose of a solemn war dance. This was a religious affair. The priest, or medicine man of the tribe, sometimes called a powwow, decorated with skins of savage beasts, and making himself as horrible to human vision as it was possible for him to do, seated himself in the center of the square on the ground. He held between his knees a drum made from a hollow log, with the ends covered with a tightly drawn skin of some wild animal, to the edges of which were attached shells, which rattled against each other and produced a monotonous and not inharmonious jingle, in just accordance with the everlasting tum, tum of the instrument to which they were attached. When the warriors were all ranged around him in order, the priest began gently and slowly to beat upon his drum with a heavy stick, accompanying the blows with a gentle undulation of the body, and a low monotone of the voice, embodying the grievances of the tribe, the purpose of the war, and what was expected of every warrior, in the coming strife. At first his voice was low and monotonous and the movements of the Indians corresponded. They moved gently backward and forward, uttering an occasional approval of the priest's recitation by a low, short grunt. Gradually warming with his theme, the powwow began to beat his drum with fiercer thumps, and to elevate his voice until it amounted to little more than a prolonged shriek. The movements of the warriors were proportionably accelerated, until at length they seemed like men each possessed of more than a legion of devils. They threw themselves into the most horrible distortions, uttered the most diabolical groans and cries, brandished their hatchets and knives, and went through all the motions of the bloody fray they so eagerly expected, with the most frantic delight.

Suddenly, when the priest and his warriors were entirely exhausted, at a signal given from him, the dance ceased, while the dancers stood reeking with perspiration and panting with the violent exertion to which they had been subjected. But after a few minutes were allowed for rest, when the same violent scenes were repeated, sometimes even to the tenth or twelfth time, each time with a slight variation of the programme. If in these excessive exercises, any of the youthful warriors broke down—which was not unfrequent—the poor youths were rejected from the band of braves, and left at home in disgrace with the old men and women, who exercised all their ingenuity to torment them with ridicule, calling them squaws and setting them to a squaw's unworthy task. At the conclusion of the dance, they seated themselves in grave circles around the priest and solemnly quaffed three whiffs from the war-pipe, beginning with the grand sachem and descending in regular gradation according to the acknowledged standing of the warriors.

And now, having made all due preparations and propitiated their deities, they set out upon their march of death. As soon as they begin to approach the neighborhood of their foes, they become circumspect and cautious. Scouts are kept in advance of the main column and on either wing, who scour the country with great fidelity and secrecy, sometimes disguising themselves and penetrating even into the very camp of the enemy. If they are not discovered on their approach, they arrange to fall upon their unsuspecting victims in that heavy hour of slumber just preceding the dawn, and mercilessly destroy all whom they can reach, being careful to reserve a suitable number of prisoners to grace their triumphal return to their native village. After burning all the wigwams, and killing all the women and old men, and destroying the standing crops, if there are any, they gather together the spoils, of which every warrior bears his part, and amidst the wildest rejoicings commence their return march. On arriving at their homes, a council is held to decide on the division of the spoils and the disposition to be made of the prisoners. If a widow or mother have been bereaved in the recent conflict, she is permitted to select one from among the prisoners to supply his place, and he is adopted into the family in good faith and becomes, bona fide, a member of the bereaved household. But some are always reserved for martyrdom, and these generally the chief men among the prisoners.

Their doom having been decided, they are at once handed over to the tender mercies of the tribe. The women and children vie with the men in calling them every opprobrious name, and taunting them with the basest cowardice. They are spat upon and every disgusting and humiliating missile is hurled at their head, until they are often covered with the most filthy and unsavory substances. Then comes the more serious work of their torment. Sometimes they are made to run the gauntlet of the whole tribe, armed with knives, and if they reach the end with life, however horribly cut and mangled, they are excused from further trial and adopted into the tribe. But more generally they are doomed to endure the horrors of a slow fire, after suffering the horrible and disgusting mutilations of the most prominent members of the body. Sometimes their bodies are stuck full of dry pitch splinters, which are set on fire and suffered thus slowly and literally to roast them alive. Sometimes they were tied to a tree in such a manner that they could walk entirely round it, and a slow fire was kindled at such a distance as to prolong the tortures of the victims to the utmost possible point of endurance. These and many other devices, as ingenious and hellish, were resorted to, in order to impress the mind of the victim with the great power of the conquerors, or to extort from the suffering enemy the smallest token of weakness and pain. But it was rare that the slightest sign escaped the sufferer. In his greatest agony, he would taunt his persecutors with their weakness, and defy them to invent some new torture. With the utmost apparent composure he would sing his death song, mingled with contemptuous curses upon the heads of the "miserable squaws," as he would denominate his fiendish executioners. This was considered the height of heroism, and commanded the admiration of even his tormentors.

Besides the dances already mentioned, there was one so peculiar as to deserve a separate notice, and might well be called the

RAFFLE DANCE.

This dance is characteristic, and shows how deeply inbred into their nature was the spirit of gambling. A dozen or more young unmarried men would assemble in one of the larger wigwams in the village, each one bringing with him his entire wealth. The indispensable drum was there, and when its slow rub-a-dub-dub commenced, one of the company stepped into the circle, with some valuable article in his hand, such as a beautiful bow and quiver, or tomahawk, a highly finished knife, a bowl or basket of his own construction, or even a costly belt of wampum, and dancing slowly forth and back, he declared its value in a musical recitation, keeping the most exact time with the tap of the drum. Presently some one from the circle would step forward and beg it, saying, "Give it me, I pray," when the dancer would immediately bestow it upon the beggar. In this way he would proceed, until he had disposed of every worldly thing he possessed. Then another would step into the circle and become alike bankrupt, his only chance of carrying anything away being that of begging in his turn from others. Such was the fascination of this game that it was no uncommon thing for the dancer to strip off his clothing and thus throw it away, or even to offer his body and life as a slave.

THE FAMILY.

There is considerable discrepancy among the early historians of the Aborigines, in respect to their conjugal condition. While some assert that anything like affection in the household was rare indeed, others declare that it was very general, and that the attachment between man and wife was very strong. That there were instances, few and far between, of deep and tender attachment, none I think can doubt, and it seems equally certain to my mind that they assumed the relation of husband and wife for convenience. But of the strong affection of the parents for their offspring, there is no dissention. Indeed, the early writers, whose ideas of family government had grown up under the rigid rule of their own puritan homes, declared that the parental authority was scarcely a name, and that the young savages soon assumed the rule of the wigwam, and carried it with a high hand against all restraint. But so soon as the unbreeched heathen began to reach the estate of manhood, the tribe assumed his teaching and discipline, and every flagrant act of disobedience or insubordination was severely punished.

The husband was complete lord of the wigwam, and the wife acted the part of a subordinate. The women were considered merely as drudges, and upon them were laid all the heavy burdens of life. To till the soil and gather in the crops, to cure the meat and skins coming from the chase, to procure fuel from the forest and food from the water, to care for every household necessity; these were to constitute the obligations of the wife, and woe to her who shrunk from the task. Her indolent lord was at liberty to quicken her movements with the use of his foot or fist, or any weapon which might be at hand. And if she fell a victim to his fury, there was no court to redress her wrongs, for the husband had power over the wife, even to the spilling of her blood. It is asserted, however, by those who became first acquainted with the Indians, that before the fatal "firewater" was introduced, such bloody scenes were seldom enacted, except in cases of marked infidelity on the part of the wife. This was looked upon as the highest crime of which the debased squaw could be guilty, while the common and constant violation of the conjugal relation on the husband's part, was by no means considered as deserving rebuke.

But the conjugal tie was not considered as binding as among civilized nations. The husband could put away his wife at pleasure, or assume a plurality of wives, provided he were able to maintain them. Nor was the wife bound to remain with her husband, if he treated her with extreme cruelty. If she could manage to escape from her unhappy home, and take refuge with a neighboring tribe, she was certain to meet with a cordial reception, and a husband ready to her hand. But if, by the reverses of war, she should again fall into the hands of her former companions, a terrible fate awaited her. Still, although divorce seemed thus easy, the cases of separation, as Roger Williams and other writers assure us, were much more rare than might have been expected. It was not uncommon to find couples who had lived together for twenty, thirty, and even fifty years, in apparent harmony.

COURTSHIP AND MARRIAGE.

When a young Indian had fixed his eye on one of the village belles, his first step was to throw himself as much as possible in her way. He visited the wigwam of her father, and often assisted her in the lighter labors in which she was engaged. He also brought to her small presents, such as a finely wrought basket, a plump partridge, a rabbit from his snares, a few porcupine quills, or a bit of wampum. If she reciprocated his attachment she cordially accepted his gifts as an evidence that his attentions were not displeasing to her. If his advances were troublesome, she would throw his gifts into his face and run from his presence. This was generally considered a rejection of the unlucky lover. But there were jilts among the aboriginal, as well as the subsequent occupants of the soil, and a shrewd lover could usually tell which way the wind blew, and persevered accordingly in his siege, until the fair citadel was overcome and ceased to resist. Meanwhile the parents had been well plied with gifts, and were thus enlisted in behalf of the lover.

No one was allowed to enter into the conjugal state without the sanction of the principal sachem of the tribe. Of course, when the successful lover had secured his quarry, his next step was to gain the consent of the chief. This was easily obtained, as a general thing, and then, as for ceremony, the only thing necessary was to place her hand in his, in the presence of the sachem, and the thing was done.

THE CIVIL POLITY.

The Indians had no written code of laws. As in all barbarous nations, there was a vast deal of independence. I cannot discover that the chiefs interfered with the commercial or domestic intercourse of their subjects, except in extreme cases of wrong or injury. If an Indian beat his wife or child, even to death, it was considered his prerogative to do so. If an Indian overreached another and imposed upon him, there was no suit brought "for obtaining goods under false pretences," but the sufferer was universally judged to have got his deserts and the robber was accounted shrewd and cunning in the trick. While one was laughed at for his verdancy the other was honored for his sagacity.

Hereditary and absolute monarchy obtained with all the American tribes. The Indians of New England were governed in each tribe, which was absolutely independent of all other tribes, except so far as they were bound by treaty for mutual defense or aggression, by a head chief, called the Grand Sachem. He was assisted in his counsels by several inferior chiefs called sagamores. The first inherited his powers, the others were appointed by the Grand Sachem, and were generally selected on account of their skill in the hunt or their bravery in war. Before these sagamores, presided over by the chief, came all important trial cases, involving life, such as murder, treason, cowardice in war, etc., etc. When the culprit was adjudged to be guilty of the crime for which he was arraigned, the sentence was carried into immediate execution, and he was despatched with a single blow of the club or tomahawk, administered by the chief, who was also the public executioner.

Each of these sagamores, on his appointment, became entitled to gather around his person such a number of warriors as he might be able, to whom he became the head and led them to battle, either under the direction of the Chief or at his own suggestion. Hence a constant rivalry existed between these petty chiefs and their respective bands. This was carried at times to such lengths as to lead to bloody collisions, which required the interference of the Chief Sachem. But this was rarely the case, and the rivalry resulted in strenuous endeavors to outdo each other in warlike and other manly feats.

In case of failure of male descent, some female of the royal line succeeded to the government ; an event rarely occurring, although not without precedent. Sometimes it happened that on the death of the sachem, there was no direct issue in the royal family. Then a sachem was elected from the lower chiefs, to sit upon the throne. This was an occasion of the greatest interest and anxiety. The different branches of the tribe were summoned to the principal village, the late royal residence. Here, under the direction of the priests, they spent many days in religious preparation, such as severe fasting, violent and long continued dances, harangues from the most able men among them, to be united in the choice they were about to make, eulogies upon the character of the late reigning monarch, etc., etc. When several days had thus passed, they met in the grand council room, and after a long and ominous silence each chief and warrior, as he was called on, indicated his preference for a candidate to fill the vacant post of honor and power. The chief who received a majority of the votes was declared elected, and he was duly installed by placing on his person and in his hands the insignia of royalty which had belonged to his predecessor. He was then conducted in great pomp and circumstance to the late royal residence, and there formally inducted into all its prerogatives, including the wives and children of the defunct chief, and all the members of the royal household. From this moment he was considered as being of royal blood, inheriting all the privileges and immunities of one born in regular descent.

That there might be no admixture of plebeian blood in the line of royal descent, the chief was absolutely forbidden to marry outside of the royal family. Or rather, although he was allowed a plurality of wives, none of his offspring were considered eligible to the throne, save such as were born of a noble mother. It was a maxim cherished among them that "if the mother be noble, the son must inherit nobility to some extent, while if she be ignoble, there may not be a drop of royal blood in his veins," plainly intimating to what an extent the spirit of the seventh commandment was respected among them.

The Indians expected from their Grand Sachem a nobler character and loftier deeds than from any other. As he was the hereditary head of the nation, so they demanded that he should excel in everything which constituted their beau ideal of a good Indian. If he met these high demands—if he showed himself brave in battle, successful in the hunt, sagacious in counsel, and energetic in the discharge of his executive duties, he was uniformly respected and beloved, and there was not a warrior in the whole tribe who would not gladly lay down his life for him, if it should become necessary. But if he were weak, cowardly, vacillating, and lax in his discipline, he was universally despised, his authority fell into disrepute, and all the affairs of the tribe became deranged.

Although by the constitution under whose regime he was born, he inherited absolute power, nothing was rarer among the Aborigines than a despotic prince. His instincts taught him that it was better policy to conciliate the good will of his proud and haughty subjects, than to try to enforce unpopular measures. Hence he often consulted his cabinet, and in cases of great emergency he sometimes called together the whole nation. This was usually a mere form, however, for if they had confidence in the wisdom of their ruler, they generally fell in with his suggestions, and brought all their energies and resources to the support of his views.

The royal household was supported by a kind of voluntary tribute. No set tax was assessed, but every one brought to the hand of his chief such gifts as they were competent to impart, and such was the force of public opinion—more potent than that of many excisemen—that a delinquency in this matter was exceedingly rare, and sure to bring the delinquent into great contempt among all the members of his tribe. Thus the house of the sachem was abundantly supplied with the necessities of life. The first fruits of the field, fish and game, necessary household utensils, the largest and most beautiful quills of the eagle or the porcupine, baskets elegantly wrought and curiously stained, bowls elaborately carved, and sometimes rich belts of wampum, skins of different wild animals or birds, constituted the unassessed revenue of this child of fortune and of power. When the chief received the gifts from his subjects, he accepted them very graciously, uttering many expressions of thanks, and saying some flattering and grateful word to the giver, at the same time bestowing some trifling present, which was received and treasured as a valuable memento of royal favor.

MORAL CHARACTER.

It is difficult for us, at this remote period, to have any just estimate of the morality of the aboriginal races. We have always been accustoned to think and speak of them as a treacherous, lying, thieving, cruel and bloodthirsty race, hated by all civilized nations and abjured by all good men. But I can find no good reason to think that they were not as true to their unwritten code of right and wrong as we are to our statute books. We must not forget that cunning, treachery, cruelty and bloodthirstiness were esteemed virtues by their best men, when exercised towards an enemy. Measured by the Christian rule they come far short, but I think a careful examination would show that they generally came quite as near the fulfillment of their acknowledged code, as do their more enlightened successors. It is true that a lax code of morals, as measured by our standard, prevailed, but what else could have been expected of savages. Still, flagrant crimes were swiftly and terribly avenged. Some of the earlier writers assert that chastity was indeed a rare virtue, that the race, with scarcely an exception, was given to the most lascivious and promiscuous intercourse, while others declare that these crimes, as in more civilized nations, were the exception and not the rule. Where there is such discrepancy it is hard to form a correct opinion. Certain is it, however, that any detected dereliction in the conjugal obligation on the part of the wife was immediately punished by putting her away, or by a severe chastisement, and sometimes by a terrible death. In one word, they were savages, and this is sufficient to blind the eyes of certain sanctimonious persons to every shade of light which might appear in their character. Yes, they were savages, without revelation, without civilization, without moral training, (except in the lowest degree,) without schools or even a written language, and it would be wrong to judge them by the rules of our church, and "damn them to everlasting fame," simply because without any of these means of culture or discipline they refuse to yield the perfect fruits of the divine law. On the whole we may say that the Indian races will compare favorably in the moral scale with any other savage races on the globe. Abstractly and measured by our higher law they may appear vile and detestable, but comparatively, and weighed in a just balance, they are far from ignoble.

DISEASES, AND THEIR TREATMENT.

There is a tradition among all the races of the original proprietors of our soil, that formerly "the Indians were as thick as the leaves of the forest," and inhabited every nook and territory of this vast country, but that a great many moons before the whites visited them, the Great Spirit became offended with his red children, and sent a terrible pestilence,* which swept off, in some places, whole tribes, leaving not one individual alive to tell the story of their fate, and greatly depopulating other portions of the land. That from this time the race has been passing away, according to the prediction of the Great Spirit, who sent his angel to thus pour out the vials of his hot wrath upon their guilty heads. The prediction seems likely to be fulfilled. Every year the races are diminishing and fast disappearing before the onward march of civilization. The inevitable cause of this decrease, we cannot here stop to consider. That there is a providential hand in it, seems not to admit of gainsaying; but this aspect of the case, also, rich as it is in material for reflection, must be passed over as not coming within the scope of our purpose.

The diseases of the Indians were few, but mostly of the inflammatory kind. Consumption was then, as now, the terror of New England. It was computed that more Indians fell a prey to this insidious but terrible disease, than to all others besides. To this were to be added, pleurisies, acute rheumatisms, quinsies, fevers, and other forms of inflammations. These were generally rapid in their development, and reached their crisis in a few days and sometimes hours. Even consumption took on the rapid type, and a few weeks served to bring its victim to the grave. Paralysis, apoplexy, and all kindred diseases were unknown, or so extremely rare as to have never attracted the notice of the earlier observers. We have spoken of epidemics. The small pox seems to have been the dreaded scourge of the Indians. This came by long intervals, but when it did make its appearance it carried dismay and consternation into every bosom. Their utter ignorance of the true manner of treating this disease, together with their excessively filthy habits of living, caused them to fall an easy prey to the destroyer. As we have seen, it was not uncommon for a whole tribe to be swept off by one visitation. In other cases only a few wretched beings were left to carry the sad intelligence to the neighboring tribes.

All the New England tribes were the victims of scrofula, as is indicated in the number of the victims to consumption—one of the commonest as well as deadliest forms of its manifestation. It likewise exhibited itself in ulcers, especially after the introduction of the accursed "firewater" among them. Toothache, also, was a very common form of its manifestation, and Roger Williams declares that with whatever fortitude an Indian would endure torture and pain, a fit of the toothache was sure to upset his equanimity, and he would cry like a baby, rolling on the ground in the most manifest agony.

The curse of civilization had not laid upon the Indian women the pangs of parturition, which appertain to what are called the more elevated classes of society. They continued all their out-door and their severer labor up to the very hour of child-birth. The early historians relate that it was by no means uncommon for a woman to be seized with the pains of childbearing while upon a journey, when she would quietly turn aside, often entirely alone, and in a few hours overtake the company with her newly born babe wrapped in a skin and strapped to her back, resuming her place in the caravan as if nothing had happened.

Whatever we may now-a-days hear of the skill of "Indian doctors," nothing is more certain than that there was an exceedingly minute amount of medical knowledge among them. They had no means of studying either the structure or economy of the human body, and their whole pharmacopia consisted in a few simples culled from the forest or mountain side. They had discovered that lobelia acted as an emetic, and thoroughwort and other bitter herbs were laxative in their effects, and this was nearly the extent of their materia medica. Sweating was a common mode of treatment in all attacks of an inflammatory kind. This was effected, generally in the following manner:—a pit was dug in the ground, and filled with heated stones, on which certain green or moistened herbs were laid, which were then sprinkled with water. The patient, wrapped closely in skins, was then made to stand over this vapor bath until a copious perspiration was induced. When this was at its height, large quantities of cold water were thrown over him, and he was wrapped in warm, dry skins, and put to bed. If a stream of water were at hand, the patient was made to plunge beneath its surface several times. This often occurred in mid-winter. There can be no doubt but that this mode of treating many of the acute diseases to which the Indians were liable, was judicious and salutary.

But they did not always depend on these outward and physical appliances. In their ignorance and superstition they believed that the earth and all its inhabitants were subject to the infestation of evil spirits, and when the disease resisted their simple remedies, they resorted to spiritual appliances. We have spoken of the priestly order recognized among all tribes of American Indians. But the mission of the priest was a very different one from that which pertains to the sacerdotal order among civilized people. It was no mediator between the human soul and its Creator; it ministered only to the physical necessities. It propitiated the great spirit and all lesser evil spirits, but only to avert evil from the body or the state. Hence, when the usual remedies failed to conquer the disease, the services of the priest were called for. In order to secure these services a douceur was expected—the powwow must be first propitiated and afterwards the malignant gods, and the length and earnestness of his incantations were measured by the weight of the bribe. These preliminaries being settled, the powwow arrayed himself in the most frightful skins of wild beasts, painted his face in the most diabolic fashion, and when he thought himself sufficiently horrible to frighten away the foul fiends, he proceeded to the house of his patient, and without uttering a sound, seated himself in the middle of the floor, and remained in utter silence for a full quarter and sometimes a half hour, the friends of the sick person sitting around him in solemn silence. He began his incantations by gently rocking his body forward and backward, accompanied with low and indistinct mutterings or chantings, occasionally reaching his hand and turning his eyes upward, as if invoking the Deity. He usually accompanied himself with a regular beat on a small drum. Gradually raising his voice, and increasing his motions, he rose by degrees until his voice came forth in the most unearthly yells, and his gestures became absolutely frightful. This bawling, gesticulating and grimacing he continued until utter exhaustion succeeded, and he was compelled to stop for want of breath. Resting for a few minutes, he commenced again in the same low manner, and soon rose to his former violence. During the performance of these rites, the sick person and all the spectators were violently exercised, and from time to time would give an approving grunt to encourage the principal actor in these orgies. When the powwow thought he had sufficiently propitiated the offending deities, or earned the full amount of his fee, he would suddenly cease his exertions, and going to the bed of the sufferer, would breathe several times in his face and on those parts of the body where the disease seemed to be concentrated, and then leave the house in the same silent and stealthy manner in which he entered it. The success of this treatment depended, doubtless, on the amount of faith in the patient and the peculiar character of the disease. A highly nervous temperament, which, among the unintelligent, is often accompanied by a large amount of superstitious belief in invisible agencies might become so greatly excited as to produce a shock sufficiently forcible to break up the disease, and cause the powers of nature to rally in his favor, and assist in his restoration to health.

DEATH, BURIAL, MOURNING, ETC.

When disease had given over dust to dust, and the spirit of their friend had departed, the relatives seated themselves around the corpse on the floor in perfect silence for several hours, with their hair disheveled and their heads bowed in solemn sorrow. Not a word was uttered, and the only manifestation of grief visible was a slow rocking of the body to and fro in a monotony of woe. For a day or two the bereaved received their friends and acquaintances. On their first approach, they would gently stroke the cheek or head of the mourner and utter some consolatory word, such as "peace," "be of good cheer," "hold up your heart," or any like expression of comfort, the mourners responding in a short grunt indicative of their appreciation of the well meant condolence.

After a day or two, according to the state of the thermometer, two or three of the principal men of the village came in, and after decorating the corpse with anklets and bracelets, and a necklace of wampum, swathed the body in mats ready to be borne to its final resting place. Meanwhile a shallow grave had been prepared with their rude wooden dibbles, the bottom of which had been covered with sticks. One of the grave and reverend undertakers then threw the body over his shoulder and bore it to the grave, the household and all the relatives of the family following, with every sign and sound of woe. Arrived at the grave they threw themselves on the ground around it, when the corpse was deposited, generally in a sitting posture, in the new made grave. Then commenced a general outburst of grief. The men would howl and moan, the women wail and shriek, plucking out their hair by handfuls, and sometimes lacerating their flesh with knives or sharp sticks, while the tears which streamed down their blackened faces and fell upon their robes in liquid soot, showed plainly enough that their grief was genuine. A few things were then deposited in the grave to help the departed spirit on his journey to the hunting grounds of the Spirit-land—such as his bow and quiver, a bowl and knife, with such trinkets as the deceased had shown a particular fondness for while in life, together with some slight provisions for his immediate necessities, for he was expected to be able soon to furnish himself with all needed food—and then the grave was filled. A fresh burst of lamentations succeeded this shutting out forever from the sight the remains of him who had been so dear in life. His best garments were now hung on some convenient tree for the use of the departed, should he have occasion to use them, where they were destined to remain until reduced to their primitive elements by the influence of the changing atmosphere. They were considered sacred, and no Indian, friend or foe, would have laid a sacrilegious finger upon them on any consideration.

The Indians manifested a good deal of affection for their dead, and sacredly consecrated a burial place in every village. These places were always approached with a feeling of awe and reverence, and for many months after the burial of a friend the grave was daily resorted to and watered by the tears of the bereaved, and many little tokens of love were deposited, from time to time, upon the grave. Sometimes a delicate morsel of food, such as the deceased was partial to, was placed there, supposing it might be useful to him in his spiritual wanderings in limbo. These were, of course, generally removed by their dogs or some beast of prey, while the simple minded Indian never doubted but that it had fallen into the hands for which it was originally intended. Whatever else was left there remained inviolate until it mingled with the dust, for one of these children of the forest would sooner have plucked out his own right eye than to have been guilty of the atrocious sacrilege of removing them.

When a great man passed away, or the son of a great sachem deceased, the funeral ceremonies were conducted on a much grander scale, and large sacrifices were offered to appease the great Spirit, or to propitiate his regard for the departed. Sometimes the body was decorated with every costly garment and trinket which belonged to the living, and laid out in great form and state for several days, in the center of the wigwam, where it was visited by all who desired to look once more upon the face of him with whom they had been so familiar in life. Every one brought some slight gift and laid it on a mat beside the corpse. After it had lain as long as was prudent, it was covered high with the most combustible material, such as pitch knots, and the whole ignited, amidst such yells and shrieks, and wailings, as only North American savages can produce, while the body, with the wigwam and everything in it, was reduced to a mass of charred brands and ashes. The bones, if any were left, and if none, the ashes, were carefully collected together and thrown hurriedly into a shallow grave, and being hastily covered, were left to mingle with their common dust.

RELIGION.

I believe that I cannot better fill this section than to transcribe to these pages the well condensed account given by J. W. De Forest Esq., in his valuable "History of the Indians of Connecticut," a book to which I have been considerably indebted in my preparation of this portion of my work. From the nomadic character of the N. A. Indian, it is perfectly natural that slight shades of difference should exist between distant tribes in the minor points of their theology; but the cardinal doctrines are wonderfully coincident between the widest extremes of residence—extremes which made utterly unintelligible to each other their common language.

"It is certain, however," says Mr. De Forest, "that they believed in one great and invisible deity, who was variously known, in different tribes, by the names of Kiehtan, Woonand and Cautantowit. He lived far away to the southwest, and concerned himself little with the affairs of men in this life. His nature was benevolent, and it was through his gift, the Indians said, that they first obtained their corn and beans. But, as they feared him not, he received little of their veneration; and their old men told the English colonists that the worship of the good Kiehtan had declined among them, even within their remembrance.

"They paid much more respect to Hobbamocko, the spirit of evil, the author of all human plagues and calamities. From the fear which his supposed power and malignant disposition inspired he received great veneration: many dances were performed in his honor, and many sacrifices offered to appease his wrath.

“But there was likewise a race of inferior deities, who might be regarded as the spirits or geniuses of various persons and objects. The Narragansetts repeated to Roger Williams the names of thirty-seven of these manittos, each being an object of worship, and each bearing a significant name. There was a god of the north, a god of the south, a god of the east, a god of the west, a god of the house, a god of women, and a god of children. The sun, the moon, the sea, the fire, and many other things were believed to be animated by spirits; and each of them, as circumstances seemed to require, might be made an object of sacrifice and adoration. Roger Williams once disputed with some Narragansetts about the existence of Yotaanit, their god of fire. To his arguments they replied: ‘What! is it possible that this fire is not a divinity? It comes out of a cold stone; it saves us from dying of hunger; if a single spark falls into the dry wood it consumes the whole country. Can anything which is so powerful be other than a deity?’

“But, although the Indians believed in, and worshiped so great a number of divinities, they seem never to have attempted to represent any of them in a substantial and visible form. Singular stones, bearing a faint resemblance to the human head and bust, have indeed been found, and have sometimes been designated as Indian gods. They are, however, evidently the productions of nature; and, as they were not shaped by the hand of man, there remains not even the presumption that they were ever the objects of his worship.

“When the Indians were questioned as to their creation, some of the inland tribes easily disposed of the subject by answering that they were descended from the inhabitants of the seacoast. As to when or how the inhabitants of the seacoast came into being they pretended not to say. Another story was, that two young squaws were once wading or swimming in the sea; the foam touched their bodies and they became pregnant; one brought forth a boy and the other a girl; the two women then died, and their children became the progenitors of the human race. Roger Williams says that the Narragansetts would allow, in general, that God made all things; but still insisted that the skies, and earth, and people of England, were made by the English God, while they, with their skies and earth, were made by their own gods. They also told him that Cautantowit, the great god of the southwest, made a man and woman of stone ; but, not liking them, he broke them in pieces, and made another pair, of wood, from whom all human beings were descended.

“If the Indians were favored with any good fortune, they acknowledged it as coming from the deity. If any calamity or accident overtook them, although no more than a common fall, they were accustomed to observe that God was angry with them. If a man even had a dream which seemed to portend misfortune, he would rise in the darkness and pray that the threatened calamity might be averted. Williams relates that an Indian child having died during the night, its father, on discovering his loss at daybreak, called up the family. All began to weep and lament, while the bereaved parent exclaimed with many tears, ‘O God, thou hast taken away my child. Thou art angry with me. O turn away thy wrath and spare the rest of my children.’

“On another occasion the same author, while gazing with unavailing pity upon a young Indian who was dying of a wound, observed that in his agonies he often called upon Muckachuckwand, the god of children. The natives who stood round informed him that many years before, Muckachuckwand had appeared to the young man in a dream, and told him to call upon him for help when he was in distress. Thus the poor Indian, in his bereavements and his dying hour, called for mercy and assistance to those gods in whom he had been taught to believe.

“They held that the soul existed after death, and that the spirits of the good would go to the house of Kiehtan, far away in the warm regions of the southwest. There they would be delivered from all sorrow and preserved from all misfortune ; and they would enjoy pleasures similar to those which are to be met with here, only in exhaustless abundance, and in complete perfection. The wicked, too, would go to the door of Kiehtan and knock for admittance ; but, upon his telling them to go away, they would be obliged to wander abroad forever in a state of horror and restless discontent. The Indians placed their heaven in the southwest, because the wind from that quarter is the warmest and pleasantest that blows in this climate, and usually brings fair weather in its train.

"The soul was called by the Narragansetts cowweowonck, a word derived from sleep; 'because,' said they, 'it works and continues in motion while the body sleeps.' They had also another name for it, signifying 'a clear sight or discernment.'

"All over New England, and, indeed, throughout all the region covered by the United States and Canada, existed that class of priesthood whom I have already mentioned, the powwows. The individuals who composed this profession were usually devoted to it from childhood, and were tried by painful ceremonies, by fasting and by want of sleep. Their object in these austerities was to attain to a converse with the gods; yet it was not every one, they imagined, who made this attempt, that succeeded; and, of those who did succeed, some were far inferior in influence and familiarity with supernatural beings to others. To confirm the idea of their inspiration, the powwows seem to have practiced some of the arts of juggling or natural magic. A number of the tricks which they thus performed were so wonderful and seemingly unaccountable, that many of the English colonists verily believed them to be accomplished by the special assistance of Satan. But, more than this, the powwows pretended to fall into trances, to be favored with visions which foretold future events, and to behold fearful and mysterious apparitions of the deity.

"It is probable that these men deliberately imposed many times upon the credulity of their countrymen; but it is also probable that they often believed themselves to be seized and impelled by the irresistible force of some supernatural impulse. It is unquestionable that, under the influence of superstition, the human mind may work itself, by its own efforts, into such a degree of excitement, as to dethrone reason for a time and wrest from it its power over the body. The actor, in such a case, will foam at the mouth, fall writhing and struggling on the ground, and even remain for a time in complete insensibility to external objects. The howling dervishes of Turkey, the pagan priests of the South Sea Islands, and the religious enthusiasts who have sometimes appeared in the Christian world, are all examples of this fact, and may be compared with the Indian powwows of Connecticut."

LITERATURE.

The North American Indians had no written language. They were in the habit of transmitting important events in a hieroglyphical description, either on the well tanned skins of wild animals or the outer membrane of the white birch. These were done with a soft stick, chewed into a broom at one end, and dipped in the brilliant colors they were able to extract from the various earths and vegetables at hand. These were nothing more than rude pictures of men and animals, with such implements as were used in the scene attempted to be described. Their language was copious, however, and susceptible of being uttered with extreme force. There has been considerable dispute as to whether the same language prevailed all over our country among the widely spread aboriginal tribes; but it is now pretty unanimously conceded that it is one and the same, with no greater variance than may be readily accounted for by the remoteness of the tribes and other natural causes. Gookin, whose early advantages for obtaining the necessary knowledge to constitute him a judge in the matter, tells us that the dialects of the New England tribes, and the Mohawks, the then remotest western tribe known, were not more unlike than those of the remote shires of England. There were, undoubtedly, many words peculiar to each tribe, or region of country, but the structure of the languages was an unit; and we are filled with astonishment that the unity of concreteness should have been so perfectly preserved, where there were no written characters to express their sounds.

The vocabulary of Indian words was very full—there being often many words to express the same meaning; and although he expressed himself with extreme sententiousness, there was no lack of words and no paucity of ideas. Some of the speeches of their great men are remarkable for their close reasoning, clear conception of the subject in hand, and eloquent application to the occasion. Some of the speeches of Red Jacket, Tecumseh, Uncas and others, will compare favorably in these respects with those of the most masterly minds in past or modern times. And since this language has been subjected to written forms, it is found to be quite elegant in its construction, and as easily subjected to the laws of grammar as that of any other tongue. Heckewelder says, “the regularity with which its words were conjugated through all the variations of the negative, causative and other forms, is truly astonishing." Indeed all the early scholars of the colonies assert that the structure of the aboriginal language was such as to render it capable of being reduced to great precision of expression, and so copious as to meet whatever demand should be made upon it. It was suited alike to poetry, declamation, argument, scorn or ridicule, however unmusical in its intonation to ears not accustomed to its sharp and guttural tones.

Like all other languages, it had its peculiarities; one of which was the blending of a sentence into a single word, thus rendering the phrase into a stenographic word, taking less time both in speaking and writing it. Thus, according to the author just quoted, a little pappoose, while playing with its dog, might utter the endearing phrase, "k wulit witchgat schis," thus, kuligartschis, which being interpreted, signifies "Thy pretty little paw." Here are four distinct and perfect words kneaded into one, perfectly expressive, and conveying all the meaning of the entire sentence. This will account for the enormous length of some Indian words, and shows that it must require great patience in the investigation of, and long acquaintance with, its peculiar construction, to obtain a complete mastery over it.

It is to be regretted that a thorough study of the great North American tongue has never been accomplished. The early settlers were both too much occupied to give it the necessary time, and too deeply tinctured with the prevailing prejudices against the race, to have done the subject anything like justice, while the inducements offered to subsequent students in this branch of literature, were far too small to induce that thorough, expressive and practical examination so necessary to its perfect reconstruction. Like a vapor which covers the bosom of the earth, the race is fast passing away. Wherever civilization plants her foot, the track of the red man disappears. The smoke of his wigwam curls no longer among the tops of the stately forests, the whiz of his swiftly speeding arrow is heard no longer through their thick branches, even the fierce war-whoop no more disturbs the still echoes of many a widely extending State, where but yesterday they were the lordly and sole occupants. To-morrow the besom will have passed over the remainder of their once proud domain, and the North American Indian will exist only in history, song and tradition. A feeling of sadness creeps over our spirits as we see these races melting away before our encroaching tread, like snow before the growing summer; but we are reconciled when we reflect that the almost infinite resources of this immense continent, destined, if we are true to ourselves, to become the seat of universal empire, would have lain forever dormant in the womb of time, and utter barbarism would have reigned where industry, intelligence, civilization and Christianity are now working out the world's great problem, and the perfect elevation of the human race.

I shall close this section with two specimens of the Indian tongue, the first being a Narraghansett rendering of the Lord's Prayer, and taken from Eliot's bible. It is as follows :

"Co shunongone ihe suck cuck abot. Na naw ui e coom shaw ims nuskspe coue so wunk. Kuck sudamong peamook. Ecook Aiotoomomon ukkee tawti ee ook ungow. A geescuck mee se nam eyew kee suck askesuck mysput eo honegan. A quon to mi nun namat to omp pa won ganuksh no. Awe ah goon to mi nad macha. Chook quoe a guck, ah greead macon jussuon mattum paw oon ganuck puk kqueaw hus nawn woochet. Matchetook kee kucks sudamong, cumme eke go wonk, ah koont seek coom sako oh woonk. Mackeeme, mackeme Eeats."

The second is also a rendering of the Lord's Prayer in the Mohegan language, and for which we are indebted to Governor Saltonstall, who obtained it in the year 1721. A literal translation of this prayer follows :

"N∞shun kesukqut guttianata munach k∞wesuonk. Peyaum∞utch kukketaff∞tamoont, kuttentantamoont 'ne n nach ohkeit neane kesukqut. Nummeetsuonqash aseksukokish assamainnean yeuyeu kesukok. Newutche kutah-taunn ketass∞tamoont, kah menuhkesuonk, kah sohsumoonk mickeme. Amen."

"Father ours above in Heaven. Admired in highest manner be thy name. Like done thy will on earth as like in Heaven. Let us be forgiven evil doings of ours, as we would forgive wrong doers to us. Not guide us into snares, but help us to escape from evil. Thine thy powerful kingdom, thine the strength, thine the greatest glory. Always, always me wish so."

TRADITION.

Although without a written language, the traditions of the Indians were many and rich, serving to illustrate their history far into the uncertain past. Whether the Indian race descended from some of the wandering tribes of the Jews, or not—and I will not exhaust the patience as well as the time of the reader, in following the order of many who have gone before me, in adding to the mist and darkness resting on this mooted question, but leave it in its inscrutable intangibility—certain it is, that their ideas of the creation of the race are so remarkably similar as to induce the belief that there must have been a common origin for the Hebrew and Indian tribes of this country. The Hebrew faith teaches us that God formed the first pair out of the dust of the earth; the Indian that the Great Spirit made the first couple out of stone, and that not pleased with the work of his hand, he broke them in pieces and made another pair out of some kind of wood, and that from this wooden pair came the whole race. This, indeed, is the great idea of the creation of the race, entertained by all the nations of the earth; the most natural, certainly, and one most likely to suggest itself to the mind of barbarism.

But there are a great many local traditions among the Indians, and the localities of the events described in them have been carefully preserved and handed down from generation to generation. Some of these are extremely interesting and full of instruction. I had intended giving some of these in the present volume, but shall be obliged to defer it until the next issue of the work.

CHRISTIANITY AMONG THE INDIANS.

The efforts of the early settlers of our country to Christianize the Indians, must be said to have proved a complete failure. A few scattering individuals were converted to the true faith, but the result, in comparison with the efforts made, is scarcely worthy to be mentioned. This result has excited great surprise among theologians and historians, and these writers have gone far and wide to find a reason for it. It has very generally been attributed to the natural repugnance of the Indian heart, and some unaccountable derangement of their intellectual organization, which would not allow them to comprehend the simple doctrines of the gospel. The theologians have thus found an argument for those very dogmas which were so repulsive to the simplicity of the savage mind, viz: the doctrine of total depravity and election, as understood by the divines of that period. The real cause of the want of success in the attempt to christianize the Indians, it seems to me is very patent. It is two-fold. First, the demoralizing effect of the introduction of liquor among them, and the example of a set of men dissolute and unprincipled in their lives; and second, the direct presentation to their minds of those peculiar doctrines of the Church, as they are called, about which the whole Church were then at logger-heads, and had been distracted and divided ever since the Reformation represented by the two great champions, Luther and Calvin. The poor Indian, in his best estate, could never have comprehended these dogmas, but when besotted by bad rum, and debauched by vile and unprincipled men, who had no other idea but to push their personal fortunes at any cost or hazard, he was not only struck with the absurdity of the pretensions of men who had so little of corresponding virtue in their daily life, but disgusted that so extraordinary a demand should be made upon them. The Indian character, it seems to me, was admirably adapted to the reception of our benign religion. All its antecedents favored its introduction among these excitable tribes. They had, naturally, a religious cast of temperament, and their views of the character and attributes of the Deity were not more debased or cruel than some phases of the Hebraistic faith. Had a company of simple-minded, whole-souled missionaries, imbued with the sole purpose of saving these debased tribes from error and spiritual death, actuated by no sordid purposes of acquisition, and setting before them constantly the all-powerful example of a life of love and purity,—had such a band of Christian teachers early landed on these shores, and devoted themselves to the duty of expounding the grand but simple doctrines of the Cross of Christ, it strikes me that they would have found that the seed they had so abundantly scattered had sprung up and borne fruit unto everlasting life, some ten, some an hundred fold.

But notwithstanding the almost universal rejection of Christianity by the aboriginal races, there were striking exceptions. There were many who embraced the Christian faith, and lived to give good evidence that its spirit had fully taken possession of their hearts, and who died under its support, rejoicing in the blessed hopes it inspires. A few there were who became men of mark, and who themselves became the teachers of their brethren. We give in our Biographical Department some account of one of these, Samson Occum, who became quite eminent as a minister of the gospel. He established a Church among his Mohegan brethren, which continues, I believe, to the present day. As late as 1837 there was quite a body of believers belonging to this Church, and through the generosity of a few friends to the cause, a neat little Chapel was erected and consecrated to the use of the Indians and their friends, of which the accompanying cut is a correct representation.

But this remnant of the once powerful tribe of the Mohegans, is fast dwindling away, and in a few years there will not be left one full-blooded Indian to testify to the existence of his race. The Mohegan blood runs in the veins of many families, however, by intermarriage, and many generations must pass away before it shall become utterly extinct.

ANECDOTES OF INDIANS.

We shall bring this chapter of our history to a close, by giving a few illustrations of Indian character. These we have gathered principally from Drake, De Forest, and others who have written the Red-man's history :

FORTUNES OF A YOUNG MOHEGAN WARRIOR.

"Among the prisoners of the Mohegans was an active young warrior, who had distinguished himself by his courage, and whom they demanded permission to put to death by torture. The English consented ; "partly," says Hubbard, "lest their denial should disoblige their Indian friends of whom they had lately made so much use ; partly that they might have ocular demonstration of the savage, barbarous cruelty of the heathen." The young captive, unappalled by the dreadful fate which awaited him, stood up after the fashion of Indian warriors, and boasted his exploits. "I have shot nineteen English with my gun. I loaded it for a twentieth. I could not meet another, and let it fly at a Mohegan. I killed him and completed my number. Now I am fully satisfied."

The Mohegan's formed a circle, and placed the victim in the center where all could gaze upon his tortures. They deliberately cut round one of his fingers at the joint, where it united with the hand, and then broke it off. They cut, in a similar manner, another and another, until only the stump of the hand was left. The blood flowed in streams, sometimes spiriting out a yard from the wounds. Some of the English wept at the horrid sight, but no one interfered. The victim shrunk not from the knife, and showed no signs of anguish. "How do you like the war?" tauntingly asked his tormentors. "I like it well," he said; "I find it as sweet as Englishmen do their sugar." They cut off his toes as they had done his fingers, and then made him dance round the circle till he was weary. At last they broke the bones of his legs. He sank upon the ground, and sat in silence until they dashed out his brains."

A PEQUOT ACHILLES.

"One of the most famous of the native adherents of the English was a Pequot, partly of Narragansett blood, called Major Symon. This man's physical strength and recklessness of danger were said to be truly astonishing. Fighting seemed to be his recreation. During the war he was seldom at home more than four or five days together, being engaged the rest of the time in warlike expeditions. It was reported that he had with his own hand killed or taken above threescore of the enemy. Once he came alone upon a band of hostile Indians as they lay at ease under a steep bank. He leaped down among them, killed some, put the rest to flight, and carried away prisoners. On another of his expeditions he fell asleep, and while sleeping, dreamed that Indians were coming upon him. He awoke with the dream, and getting up, discovered some of the hostile warriors approaching his resting-place. He presented his gun and they stopped: he then turned and made his escape, although he was very weary and his pursuers were numerous. Towards the close of the war, he was traveling with two other Indians and Thomas Stanton, to Seaconet. On their march they learned that some of the enemy were near by, upon which the three Indians left Stanton and went in search of them. They found the camp, but the warriors of the company were gone, and had left behind them only a few young men, women and children. These surrendered to Major Symon and his companions, who led them away at a rapid pace. One old man was unable to keep up with the party, and was allowed to lag behind on his promising that he would follow. In the meantime the warriors had returned to camp; and, having taken up the trail, soon overtook the old man, and learned from him what had happened. They speedily came up with the three adventurous warriors, killed one of them, and liberated the captives. Major Symon and his remaining companion stood at bay, and the former offered to fight any five of the assailants if they would lay aside their guns, and use only their hatchets. They feared his strength and dexterity too much to accept the challenge, and advanced on him in a body. He fired upon them, and, rushing furiously forward, broke through their line and escaped, followed by his companion. After hostilities were over in Massachusetts, this Pequot Achilles joined an expedition against the Indians of Maine and New Hampshire, where for nearly two years more the flame of war continued to smoulder on. No particulars of his achievements there, however, are known, nor whether he fell with the hatchet in his hand, or returned home to die in the midst of despised and detested peace."

ORIGIN OF SACHIEM'S HEAD.

A traditionary story of Uncas pursuing, overtaking and executing a Pequot sachem, as given in the Historical Collections, may not be unqualifiedly true. It was after Mystic fight, and is as follows: Most of the English forces pursued the fugitives by water, westward, while some followed by land with Uncas and his Indians. At a point of land in Guilford, they came upon a great Pequot sachem, and a few of his men. Knowing they were pursued, they had gone into an adjacent peninsula, "hoping their pursuers would have passed by them. But Uncas knew Indian's craft, and ordered some of his men to search that point. The Pequots perceiving that they were pursued, swam over the mouth of the harbor, which is narrow. But they were waylaid, and taken as they landed. The sachem was sentenced to be shot to death. Uncas shot him with an arrow, cut off his head, and stuck it up in the crotch of a large oak-tree near the harbor, where the skull remained for a great many years." This was the origin of SACHEM'S HEAD, by which name the harbor of Guilford is well known to coasters.

Dr. Mather records the expedition of the English, but makes no mention of Uncas. He says, they set out from Saybrook fort, and "sailed westward in pursuit of the Pequots, who were fled that way. Sailing along to the westward of Mononowuttuck, the wind not answering their desires, they cast anchor." "Some scattering Pequots were then taken and slain, as also the Pequot sachem, before expressed, had his head cut off, whence that place did bear the name of SACHEM'S HEAD."

ANECDOTE OF OWENECO.

"Oweneco died in 1715, aged, it is probable, about seventy or seventy-five years. The brave warrior who, in his youth and early manhood, fought gallantly against the Pocomtocks, the Pokanokets and Narragansetts, became in his old age a mere vagabond. With his blanket, his gun, his squaw, and a pack on his back, he used often to wander about the settlements adjacent to Mohegan. At his old friends and acquaintances he was generally made welcome, and established himself, during his stay, in the kitchen, or some of the out-houses. To strangers, who were unable to understand his imperfect English, he sometimes presented a doggerel petition which had been written for him by a settler named Bushnell.

"Oneco, king, his queen doth bring,
To beg a little food;
As they go along his friends among
To try how kind, how good.

"Some pork, some beef, for their relief,
And if you can't spare bread,
She'll thank you for pudding, as they go a gooding,
And carry it on her head."

The last line refers to an Indian mode of carrying burdens, by a metomp, or bag, hanging down the back, and supported by a strap passing over the forehead."

INDIAN MONEY, WAMPUM BELTS, ETC.

We get the following quaint description of the Indian currency from Drake. It is taken originally from "Lawson's account of the Carolinas." It is as follows :

"Their money," he says, "is of different sorts, but all made of shells, which are found on the coast of Carolina, being very large and hard, and difficult to cut. Some English smiths have tried to drill this sort of shell money, and thereby thought to get an advantage, but it proved so hard that nothing could be gained;" and Morton, in his New English Canaan, says that, although some of the English in New England have tried "by example to make the like, yet none hath ever attained to any perfection in the composure of them, so but that the salvages have found a great difference to be in the one and the other; and have known the counterfeit beads from those of their own making; and have, and doe slight them." Hence the conclusion of Josselyn, before extracted, namely, that "neither Jew nor devil could counterfeit the money of the Indians." Mr. Lawson continues: "The Indians often make, of the same kind of shells as those of which their money is made, a sort of gorget, which they wear about their necks in a string; so it hangs on their collar, whereon sometimes is engraven a cross, or some odd sort of figure which comes next in their fancy. There are other sorts valued at a doeskin, yet the gorgets will sometimes sell for three or four buckskins ready dressed. There be others, that eight of them go readily for a doeskin; but the general and current species of all the Indians in Carolina, and I believe, all over the continent, as far as the bay of Mexico, is that which we call Peak, and Ronouk, but Peak more especially. This is that which at New York they call Wampum, and have used it as current money amongst the inhabitants for a great many years. Five cubits of this purchase a dressed doeskin, and seven or eight buy a dressed buckskin. To make this Peak it cost the English five or ten times as much as they could get for it, whereas it cost the Indians nothing, because they set no value upon their time, and therefore have no competition to fear, or that others will take its manufacture out of their hands. It is made by grinding the pieces of shell upon stone, and is smaller than the small end of a tobacco-pipe, or large wheat straw. Four or five of these make an inch, and every one is to be drilled through and made as smooth as glass, and so strung, as beads are. A cubit, of the Indian measure contains as much in length as will reach from the elbow to the end of the little finger. They never stand to question whether it be a tall man or a short one that measures it. If this wampum-peak be black or purple, as some part of that shell is, then it is twice the value. The drilling is the most difficult and tedious part of the manufacture. It is done by sticking a nail in a cane or reed, which they roll upon their thighs with their right hand, while with their left they apply the bit of shell to the iron point. But especially in making their ronoak, four of which will scarce make one length of wampum. Such is the money of the Indians, with which you may buy all they have. It is their mammon, (as our money is to us,) that entices and persuades them to do anything, part with their captives or slaves, and, sometimes, even their wives' and daughters' chastity. With it they buy off murderers; and whatever a man can do that is ill, this wampum will quit him of, and make him, in their opinion, good and virtuous, though never so black before."

A REMARKABLE INDIAN BELT.

"In 1720 a circumstance occurred in Connecticut, which caused some little alarm among the settlers of the western part of the colony. It was discovered that a belt of wampum had been brought from some Indian place at the south called Towattowau, and, after arriving at Ammowaugs on the Hudson River, had reached an Indian living at Horseneck in the town of Greenwich. From him it had been carried to Chickens or Sam Mohawk, in Reading; from thence to Potatuck or Newtown, and from there to Wyantenock or New Milford, where it stopped. The Assembly caused some inquiries to be made into the mystery, and an Indian named Tapauranawko testified that the belt was in token that, at each place where it was accepted, captive Indians would be received and sold. He said that it would be sent back to Ammowaugs, and from there to Towattowau, which was a great ways to the south, and was inhabited by a large tribe of Indians. The Assembly resolved that no further notice should be taken of the belt; that the Indians should be directed to send it back whence it came ; and should be charged not to receive such presents in future without giving notice to the magistrates."

ANOTHER BELT, AND CURIOUS INCIDENT.

The redoubtable Capt. Church, after he had killed Philip, was fortunate enough to take prisoner Annawon, one of Philip's most sagacious chiefs, and successor to him in command of the Wampanoags. They had encamped for the night. "When supper was over, Captain Church set his men to watch, telling them that if they would let him sleep two hours, they should sleep all the rest of the night, he not having slept any for 36 hours before ; but after laying a half hour, and feeling no disposition to sleep, from the momentous cares upon his mind,—for, as Dr. Young says in the Revenge,

"The dead alone, in such a night, can rest,"— he looked to see if his watch were at their posts, but they were all fast asleep. Annawon felt no more like sleeping than Church, and they lay for some time looking one upon the other. Church spoke not to Annawon, because he could not speak Indian, and thought Annawon could not speak English, but it now appeared that he could, from a conversation they held together. Church had laid down with Annawon to prevent his escape, of which, however, he did not seem much afraid, for after they had laid a considerable time Annawon got up and walked away out of sight, which Church considered was on a common occasion ; but being gone some time, 'he began to suspect some ill design.' He therefore gathered all the guns close to himself, and lay as close as he possibly could under young Annawon's side, that if a shot should be made at him, it must endanger the life of young Annawon also. After lying a while in great suspense, he saw, by the light of the moon, Annawon coming with something in his hands. When he had got to Captain Church, he knelt down before him, and, after presenting him what he had brought, spoke in English as follows :—'Great captain, you have killed Philip, and conquered his country. For I believe that I and my company are the last that war against the English, so suppose the war is ended by your means, and therefore these things belong unto you.' He then took out of his pack a beautifully wrought belt, which belonged to Philip. It was nine inches in breadth, and of such length, as when put about the shoulders of Captain Church, it reached to his ankles. This was considered, at that time, of great value, being embroidered all over with money, that is, wampumpeag, of various colors, curiously wrought into figures of birds, beasts and flowers. A second belt, of no less exquisite workmanship, was next presented, which belonged also to Philip. This, that chief used to ornament his head with; from the back part of which flowed two flags, which decorated his back. A third was a smaller one, with a star upon the end of it, which he wore upon his breast. All three were edged with red hair, which, Annavon said, was got in the country of the Mohawks. These belts, or some of them, it is believed, remain, at this day, the property of a family in Swansey. He next took from his pack two horns of glazed powder, and a red cloth blanket. These, it appears, were all that remained of the effects of the great chief. He told Captain Church that those were Philip's royalties, which he was wont to adorn himself with, when he sat in state, and he thought himself happy in having an opportunity to present them to him."

ETIQUETTE.

A story of the marriage of a daughter of Passaconaway, in 1662, is thus related:—" Winnepurket, commonly called George, sachem of Saugus, made known to the chief of Pennakook, that he desired to marry his daughter, which, being agreeable to all parties, was soon consummated, at the residence of Passaconaway, and the hilarity was closed with a great feast. According to the usages of the chiefs, Passaconaway ordered a select number of his men to accompany the new-married couple to the dwelling of the husband. When they had arrived there, several days of feasting followed, for the entertainment of his friends, who could not be present at the consummation at the bride's father's, as well as for the escort; who, when this was ended, returned to Pennakook.

Some time after, the wife of Winnepurket, expressing a desire to visit her father's house and friends, was permitted to go, and a choice company conducted her. When she wished to return to her husband, her father, instead of conveying her as before, sent to the young sachem to come and take her away. He took this in high dudgeon, and sent his father-in-law this answer:—"When she departed from me, I caused my men to escort her to your dwelling, as became a chief. She now having an intention to return to me, I did expect the same." The elder sachem was now in his turn angry, and returned an answer which only increased the difference; and it is believed that thus terminated the connection of the new husband and wife."

INDIAN LITERATURE.

The following are letters from an Indian sagamore to the governor of New Hampshire:—

"May 15th, 1685. Honor governor my friend. You my friend I desire your worship and your power, because I hope you can do som great matters this one. I am poor and naked, and have no men at my place because I afraid allways Mohogs he will kill me every day and night. If your worship when please pray help me you no let Mohogs kill me at my place at Malamake River called Panukkog and Natukkog, I will submit your worship and your power. And now I want powder and such alminishon, shatt and guns, because I have forth at my hom, and I plant theare.

"This all Indian hand, but pray you do consider your humble servant, JOHN HOGKINS."

"Honor Mr. Governor,—Now this day I com your house, I vant se you, and I bring my hand at before you I want shake hand to you if your worship when please, then receive my hand then shake your hand and my hand. You my friend because I remember at old time when live my grant father and grant mother then Englishmen com this country, then my grant father and Englishmen they make a good government, they friend allwayes, my grant father living at place called Malamakerever, other name chef Natukko and Panukkog, that one rever great many names and I bring you this few skins at this first time I will giue my friend.

"This all Indian hand."

"Please your worship,—I will intreat you matther you my friend now [] this if my Indian he do you long pray you no put your law, because som my Indians fool, som men much love drunk then he no know what he do, may be he do mischief when he drunk if so pray you must let me know what he done because I will ponis him about what he haue done, you, you my friend if you desire my business, then sent me I will help you if I can.

JOHN HODKINS."

"Mr. Mason,—Pray I want speak you a few words if your worship when please because I com parfas I will speake this governor but he go away so he say at last night, and so far I understand this governor his power that your power now, so he speak his own month. Pray if you take what I want pray com to me because I want go hom at this day. Your humble servant,

"May 16, 1685.

JOHN HODKINS, Indian sagmor."

INDIAN METAPHORS.

At a grand council of peace held between Gov. Dudley and the Penobscot Indians, Captain Simmo, an influential chief, thus replies to the Governor's address:—

"We thank you, good brother, for coming so far to talk with us. It is a great favor. The clouds fly and darken—but we still sing with love the songs of peace. Believe my words.—SO FAR AS THE SUN IS ABOVE THE EARTH ARE OUR THOUGHTS FROM WAR, OR THE LEAST RUPTURE BETWEEN US."

"Although several missionaries have come among us, sent by the French friars to break the peace between the English and us, yet their words have made no impression upon us. WE ARE AS FIRM AS THE MOUNTAINS, AND WILL SO CONTINUE, AS LONG AS THE SUN AND MOON ENDURES."

LOVEWELL'S FIGHT.

The following account of this "bloodie tragedie" is taken from the New Hampshire Historical Collections, without credit:—

"It is said that PAUGUS was well known to many of the English, and personally to many of Lovewell's men. That his name was a terror to the frontiers, we have no doubt; and that his appearance at Pequawket, when met by Lovewell, was enough to have struck terror into all that beheld him, may not be questioned, we will let the poet describe him.

1. 'Twas Paugus led the Pequ'k't tribe:
As runs the fox, would Paugus run;
As howls the wild wolf, would he howl;
A huge bear-skin had Paugus on.
2. But Chamberlain, of Dunstable,
One whom a savage ne'er shall sley,
Met Paugus by the water-side,
And shot him dead upon that day.

"The second in command among the Indians on that memorable day was named WANWA, but of him we have no particulars. Captain Lovewell marched out from Dunstable with 46 men, about the 16 April, 1725, of which event the poet thus speaks:—

3. What time the noble Lovewell came,
With fifty men from Dunstable,
The cruel Pequ'k't tribe to tame,
With arms and bloodshed terrible.
4. With Lovewell brave John Harwood came;
From wife and babes 'twas hard to part;
Young Harwood took her by the hand,
And bound the weeper to his heart.
5. "Repress that tear, my Mary, dear,
Said Harwood to his loving wife;
It tries me hard to leave thee here,
And seek in distant woods the strife.
6. "When gone, my Mary, think of me,
And pray to God that I may be
Such as one ought that lives for thee,
And come at last in victory."
7. Thus left young Harwood, babe and wife;
With accent wild she bade adieu:
It grieved those lovers much to part,
So fond and fair, so kind and true.
8. John Harwood died all bathed in blood,
When he had fought till set of day;
And many more we may not name,
Fell in that bloody battle fray.
9. When news did come to Harwood's wife,
That he with Lovewell fought and died;
Far in the wilds had given his life
Nor more would in this home abide;

10. Such grief did seize upon her mind,
Such sorrow filled her faithful breast,
On earth she ne'er found peace again,
But followed Harwood to his rest.

"They arrived near the place where they expected to find Indians, on the 7 May; and, early the next morning, while at prayers, heard a gun, which they rightly expected to be fired by some of Paugus's men, and immediately prepared for an encounter. Divesting themselves of their packs, they marched forward to discover the enemy. But not knowing in what direction to proceed, they marched in an opposite direction from the Indians. This gave Paugus great advantage; who, following their tracks, soon fell in with their packs, from which he learned their strength. Being encouraged by his superior numbers, Paugus courted the conflict, and pursued the English with ardor. His number of men was said to have been 80, while that of the English consisted of no more than 34, having left ten in a fort, which they built at Ossipee; and one, an Indian named Toby, had before returned home, on account of lameness. The fort at Ossipee was for a retreat in case of emergency, and to serve as a deposit of part of their provisions, of which they disencumbered themselves before leaving it.

"After marching a considerable distance from the place of their encampment on the morning of the 8 May, Ensign Wyman discovered an Indian who was out hunting, having in one hand some fowls he had just killed, and in the other, two guns. There can be no probability that he thought of meeting an enemy, but no sooner was he discovered by the English, than several guns were fired at him, but missed him. Seeing that sure death was his lot, this valiant Indian resolved to defend himself to his last breath; and the action was as speedy as the thought: his gun was leveled at the English, and Lovewell was mortally wounded. Ensign Wyman, taking deliberate aim, killed the poor hunter; which action our poet describes in glowing terms as follows:—

11. Seth Wyman, who in Woburn lived,
A marksman he of courage true,
Shot the first Indian whom they saw;
Sheer through his heart the bullet flew.
12. The savage had been seeking game;
Two guns, and eke a knife, he bore,
And two black ducks were in his hand;
He shrieked, and fell to rise no more.

"He was scalped by the chaplain and another, and then they marched again by the way they came, to recover their packs. This movement was expected by the wily Paugus, and he accordingly prepared an ambush to cut them off, or to take them prisoners, as fortune should will.

13. Anon, there eighty Indians rose,
Who'd hid themselves in ambush dread ;
Their knives they shook, their guns they aimed,
The famous Paugus at their head.

14. John Lovewell, captain of the band,
His sword he waved, that glittered bright,
For the last time he cheered his men,
And led them onward to the fight.

"When the Indians rose from their coverts, they nearly encircled the English, but seemed loath to begin the fight ; and were, no doubt, in hopes that the English, seeing their numbers, would yield without a battle ; and, therefore, made towards them with their guns presented, and threw away their first fire. They then held up ropes which they had provided for securing captives, and asked them if they would have quarter. This only encouraged the English, who answered "only at the muzzles of their guns ;" and they rushed toward the Indians, fired as they pressed on, and, killing many, drove them several rods. But they soon rallied and fired vigorously in their turn, and obliged the English to retreat, leaving nine dead and three wounded, where the battle began. Lovewell, though mortally wounded before, had led his men until this time, but fell before the retreat.

"Although we transpose the verses in the song, to accommodate them to the circumstances of the fight, yet we cannot avoid entirely their irregularity in reference to it. By the next that follow, it would seem, that Lovewell received a second wound before he fell.

15. "Fight on, fight on," brave Lovewell said ;
"Fight on, while Heaven shall give you breath !"
An Indian ball then pierced him through,
And Lovewell closed his eyes in death.

16. Good heavens ! is this a time for prayer ?
Is this a time to worship God ;
When Lovewell's men are dying fast,
And Paugus' tribe hath felt the rod ?

"In this 16th verse the poet, perhaps, had reference to the morning prayer, which Mr. Frye, the chaplain, made before marching, on the day of the battle; or, perhaps, more probably, to the ejaculations he made on the field after he was mortally wounded. In the morning he prayed thus patriotically:—'We came out to meet the enemy; we have all along prayed God we might find them; we had rather trust Providence with our lives; yea, die for our country, than try to return without seeing them, if we might; and be called cowards for our pains.'

17. The chaplain's name was Jonathan Frye;
In Andover his father dwelt,
And oft with Lovewell's men he'd prayed,
Before the mortal wound he felt.
18. A man was he of comely form,
Polished and brave, well learnt and kind;
Old Harvard's learned halls he left,
Far in the wilds a grave to find.
19. Ah! now his blood-red arm he lifts,
His closing lids he tries to raise;
And speak once more before he dies,
In supplication and in praise.
20. He prays kind Heaven to grant success,
Brave Lovewell's men to guide and bless,
And when they've shed their hearts'-blood true,
To raise them all to happiness.
21. "Come hither, Farwell," said young Frye,
"You see that I'm about to die;
Now for the love I bear to you,
When cold in death my bones shall lie;
22. "Go thou and see my parents dear,
And tell them you stood by me here;
Console them when they cry, Alas!
And wipe away the falling tear."
23. Lieutenant Farwell took his hand,
His arm around his neck he threw,
And said, "Brave chaplain, I could wish
That Heaven had made me die for you."
24. The chaplain on kind Farwell's breast,
Bloody, and languishing, he fell;
Nor after that, said more but this:
"I love thee, soldier; fare thee well!"

“‘The fight continued,’ says the Reverend Mr. Symmes, ‘very furious and obstinate till towards night. The Indians roaring and yelling, and howling like wolves, barking like dogs, and making all sorts of hideous noises; the English frequently shouting and huzzaing, as they did after the first round. At one time Captain Wyman is confident they were got to Powawing, by their striking on the ground, and other odd motions; but at length Wyman crept up towards them, and, firing amongst them, shot the chief Powaw, and broke up their meeting.’

25. Good heavens! they dance the powwow dance,
What horrid yells the forest fill!
The grim bear crouches in his den,
The eagle seeks the distant hill.

26. “What means this dance, this powwow dance?”
Stern Wyman said; with wondrous art,
He crept full near, his rifle aimed,
And shot the leader through the heart.

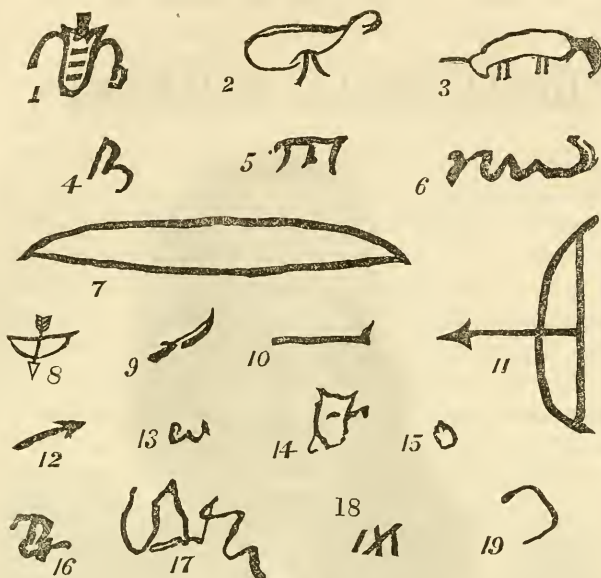

“The first of the following stanzas is very happily conceived, and although not in the order of the poet, is as appropriate here, as where it originally stood.

27. Then did the crimson streams, that flow’d,
Seem like the waters of the brook,
That brightly shine, that loudly dash,
Far down the cliffs of Agiochook.

28. Ah! many a wife shall rend her hair,
And many a child cry, “Woe is me,”
When messengers the news shall bear,
Of Lovewell’s dear-bought victory.

29. With footsteps slow shall travelers go,
Where Lovewell’s pond shines clear and bright,
And mark the place where those are laid,
Who fell in Lovewell’s bloody fight.

30. Old men shall shake their heads, and say,
‘Sad was the hour and terrible,
When Lovewell, brave, ’gainst Paugus went,
With fifty men from Dunstable.’”

BIOGRAPHICAL DEPARTMENT.

NINIGRET.

NINIGRET, or, as he is variously called, Ninicroft, Niniglut, Neneglett, Nenckunat, with as many more readings as there were writers of his name, was a chief of a tribe of the Narragansetts, which went by the name of Niantics. His place of residence was called Wekapaug, where Westerly, in Rhode Island, is now situated. Early in the history of the colonies of Massachusetts, the Narragansetts became entangled with the English, and negotiation and breach of faith followed each other so closely that the colonists lost all confidence in their red neighbors. The difficulty resulted in a protracted war, in which much English blood was spilt, and many Indians lost their lives.

In 1643, a Dutch and Indian war raged with much violence, and Ninigret seems to have figured somewhat in it; but the war was brought to a close through the friendly interference of Roger Williams, the "Indian's friend." After this he became a friend to the Dutch, and went to reside at one time among them in New York. The Dutch being at war with the English at this time, considerable alarm was felt by the latter lest Ninigret was intending an alliance with their enemies. Commission after commission was sent to the Niantics, and the sachem and other chiefs and braves were summoned to Plymouth and Boston to meet the commissioners of the united colonies upon the subject of their disaffection. The records of these meetings afford some curious specimens of Indian diplomacy. It is almost impossible to determine, now, the exact state of the controversy between them. Thus much is certain: the English made large demands of wampum of the Indians, as a compensation for certain alleged robberies and injuries suffered by the former at the hands of the latter. Ninigret does not acknowledge the claim, and somewhat proudly replies to the commissioners, "For what are the Narragansetts to pay so much wampum? I know not that they are indebted to the English."

The speeches at these conventions are worthy the slipperiest politicians of modern days. In reply to the demand of the English concerning the true feelings of the Indians, they reply, "We desire there may be no mistake, but that we may be understood, and that there may be a true understanding on both sides. We desire to know where you had this news, that there was such a league made betwixt the Dutch and us, and also to know our accusers."

As a specimen of the eloquence of Ninigret, we give a portion of his speech on one of these occasions, as we find it condensed in Drake: "I utterly deny that there has been any agreement made between the Dutch governor and myself, to fight against the English. I did never hear the Dutchmen say they would go and fight against the English; neither did I hear the Indians say they would join with them. But, while I was there at the Indian wigwams, there came some Indians that told me there was a ship come in from Holland, which did report the English and Dutch were fighting together in their own country, and there were several other ships coming with ammunition to fight against the English here, and that there would be a great blow given to the English when they came. But this I had from the Indians, and how true it is I cannot tell. I know not of any wrong the English have done me, therefore why should I fight against them? Why do the English sachems ask me the same questions over and over again? Do they think we are mad, and would, for a few guns, sell our lives, and the lives of our wives and children? As to their tenth question, it being indifferently spoken, whether I may go or send, though I know nothing myself, wherein I have wronged the English, to prevent my going; yet, as I said before, it being left to my choice, that is, it being indifferent to the commissioners, whether I will send some one to speak with them, I will send."

Ninigret did not join with the other Narragansett chiefs in the war of Philip, but kept himself aloof. He did not escape the suspicion of the English, however, and had considerable trouble to clear himself of the various accusations brought against him.

Ninigret was bitterly opposed to the introduction of the "gospel of the whites" into his tribe. To every appeal of the missionaries he returned the argumentum ad hominem, "When it makes good white men, then come to Ninigret and his red brethren." He believed that that was a very poor creed which produced no purer morality, and could, for the life of him, perceive no advantage to be derived by embracing a religion whose fruits were so imperfect. He could not separate the result from the speculation. Poor Ninigret! he is neither the first nor the last that has labored, and will still labor, under "the dilemma."

Ninigret lived to be very old, and the time of his death is unknown.

HENDRICK.

IN a beautiful spot in the valley of the Mohawk, on the banks of the river of that name, chief of the warlike tribe of the Mohawks, lived HENDRICK, a famous old warrior of consummate skill and sagacity, and respected or feared by all the neighboring tribes. He ruled his own tribe with unquestioned authority, but with such wisdom and prudence as to gain the affection as well as respect of all his grim warriors. Dauntless as a lion, he sought the post of difficulty and danger, and wherever he would dare to go his braves were ever ready to follow.

When the English settled in the valley of the Mohawk, they found Hendrick master of the soil and lord of all the red men there. He received them with a friendly hand, and through the prudent management of Sir William Johnson, his friendship was secured, and he became a formidable ally in the war they afterwards waged with the French. Johnson had come to this country to act as the agent of an uncle who had purchased large tracts of land in that region, and he lived with the Indians after their own fashion. He was afterwards employed by the English in their war with the French, and was enabled to secure the aid of Hendrick and his tribe. At one time he had nearly two thousand warriors in the field, under the English flag, a larger number than had ever before been brought into an open field of battle.

Hendrick was of great service to General Johnson, as he was thoroughly acquainted with the country round for hundreds of miles, and his sagacious but homely counsel was often adopted with much advantage. When, on a certain occasion, it had been decided in a war council to send a small party to surprise a large body of the French his opinion was asked, he shrewdly replied, "If they are to fight, they are too few; if they are to be killed, they are too many." And when the question was discussed whether the attacking party should be separated into three divisions, or make the attack in one body, he picked up three small sticks, and, putting them together, remarked, "See! you cannot break them together; try your strength on each one separately, and it is easily done."

Having decided on the attack, just before the commencement of their march, the old chief mounted a gun carriage and addressed his warriors in a speech full of fire and eloquence, and which had an electrical effect upon those impassive sons of the forest. He was then past sixty-five years of age, and his long, white locks streamed in the wind, making him look like one inspired. President Dwight thus speaks of this address: "Lieutenant Colonel Pomeroy, who was present and heard this effusion of Indian eloquence, told me that, although he did not understand a word of the language, such were the animation of Hendrick, the fire of his eye, the force of his gestures, the strength of his emphasis, the apparent propriety of the inflections of his voice, and the natural appearance of his whole manner, that himself was more deeply affected with this speech than with any other he had ever heard."

In this bloody fight Hendrick received his death-wound. He was shot in the back, a fact which greatly annoyed him, lest it should lead his friend Johnson to think he had fallen with his back to the enemy; but as soon as he could be satisfied that the ball came from the extreme flank of the enemy's line, he died contented. He was greatly lamented, both by his subjects and the English. We will conclude our sketch of this noble brave with the following characteristic anecdote: "Soon after Sir William Johnson entered upon his duties as superintendent of Indian affairs in North America, he received from England some richly embroidered suits of clothes. Hendrick was present when they were received, and could not help expressing a great desire for a share in them. He went away very thoughtful, but returned not long after, and called upon Sir William, and told him he had dreamed a dream. Sir William very concernedly desired to know what it was. Hendrick as readily told him he had dreamed that Sir William Johnson had presented him with one of his new suits of uniform. Sir William could not refuse it, and one of the elegant suits was forthwith presented to Hendrick, who went away to show his present to his countrymen, and left Sir William to tell the joke to his friends. Some time after the general met Hendrick, and told him he had dreamed a dream. Whether the sachem mistrusted that he was now to be taken in his own net, or not, is not certain; but he seriously desired to know what it was, as Sir William had done before. The general said he dreamed that Hendrick had presented him with a certain tract of land, which he described, (consisting of about five hundred acres of the most valuable land, in the valley of the Mohawk River.) Hendrick answered, 'It is yours;' but, shaking his head, said, 'Sir William Johnson, I will never dream with you again.'"

GOVERNOR SALTONSTALL.

"THERE was a dignity and moral grandeur of character in some of that proud old puritanic stock which found its way into the wilderness of New England, as strange as it was rare, which quite eclipsed the ostentatious display of wealth and station which nowadays pass current for aristocracy. That was the aristocracy of blood and mind, this of mere wealth and place—the genuine diamond and the falsely-glittering paste. It is impossible to look upon some of the leaders of the earliest settlements in New England without a feeling of reverence and admiration, while, at the same instant, a smile is elicited at the incongruous robe of puritanism which is thrown over it. What a strange mixture of character appeared in these men ! Punctilious, exact and exacting ; ready to do and dare ; to suffer and sacrifice ; even to die for conscience' sake, and as ready to sing the death song of any unfortunate brother who perished by their hands for an equally conscientious difference of opinion on the great subject of religious faith.

GURDON SALTONSTALL, one of the early governors of Connecticut, was one of those magnificent men whose very step and carriage revealed the noble descent and proud consciousness of superiority, as his picture above fully exhibits. Of noble lineage, one of a long line of great-souled men, his father came to New England early in the seventeenth century ; and from him has descended some of the finest specimens of New England men. Gurdon, the subject of this memoir, was born at Haverhill, Massachusetts, on the 27th of March, 1666. His early education was acquired at the paternal hearth ; and after a due course of preparation in the study of the parish minister, he was sent to the University at Cambridge, Massachusetts, from whence he was graduated in 1684, when only eighteen years of age.

His godly parents had long since consecrated their beautiful child to the mission of the Church of Christ—a consecration fully acknowledged by young Saltonstall as soon as he had reached the period at which he was thought capable of judging for himself. Accordingly, as soon as he left college, he entered upon the study of divinity ; and, having received the approbation of the ministerial association in the neighborhood where he resided, he commenced his career as a preacher of the gospel. Such was his great popularity, that he received invitations from several quarters ; and, accepting a call from the church and society in New London, Connecticut, he was ordained to his holy calling on the 25th of November, 1691.

Here he remained for several years, “ every year increasing in favor with God and man.” He soon began to exhibit those traits of character which so eminently fitted him for the Christian ruler. Wise, prudent, judicious, yet energetic and prompt in all the duties of his office, his church grew in numbers and in graces under his diligent oversight ; while his magisterial character indicated to his friends that his sphere was in the civil realm rather than the clerical. Thus advised by all his clerical brethren, and called to the change by the spontaneous voice of the colony, he left the sacerdotal robes at the foot of the altar, and, assuming the badges of political office, he entered upon the discharge of the duties of governor of Connecticut, to which he was elected in 1707.

Governor Saltonstall soon acquired immense influence, and ruled with such discreet zeal that he was annually reelected to that office until the day of his death, which occurred September 24, 1724, at which time he was in the fifty-ninth year of his age.

He was a strict disciplinarian, and the principal author of the Saybrook platform. Although contrary to the creed of the puritans, the rigid government of the presbyterians had a charm for him, and, beyond doubt, had an influence with him in the organization of that religious platform. His influence and popularity were such that he could carry almost any measure he desired, and he doubtless contributed not a little to the stern character for which Connecticut was so early distinguished.

Governor Saltonstall had a most majestic eye, which was softened by an exceedingly benignant smile and a suavity of address, which put at ease all those who entered his presence. As an orator he had few superiors; "the music of his voice, the force of his arguments, the beauty of his allusions, the ease of his transitions, and the fulness of his diction giving him the highest rank."

EDUCATIONAL DEPARTMENT.

We had expected to be able to give in the present Number, a beautiful view of Yale College. But we could not accomplish it in season, to have it placed at the head of our Educational Department. We hope next year to give an excellent engraving of Yale, and to follow it up with representations of all the Educational buildings in the State, public and private.

THE STATE REFORM SCHOOL OF CONNECTICUT.

In June, 1851, an act was passed by the Legislature of Connecticut, establishing "a school for the instruction, employment and reformation of juvenile offenders, to be called the State Reform School," and located at West Meriden.

This act appropriated the sum of $10,000 for the school whenever an equal amount was paid by individuals. At the request of Rev. S. W. S. Dutton, and Alfred Walker and Henry White, Esquires, Philemon Hoadley, Esq., of New Haven, procured by subscription the specified amount, and under his directions buildings were erected in 1853, and March 1, 1854, the school was opened for the reception of inmates. A Board of Trustees, consisting of one from each county in the State, had previously been appointed. Of this Board, Mr. Hoadley was a member, and was by them appointed Superintendent of the institution, until a suitable man could be found to take the place.

The engraving shows the plan of the building (of brick) when completed, which is designed to accommodate three hundred pupils, and those who have the care of them. From the insufficiency of funds, however, only the central portion and one wing, and the Superintendent's apartments, are finished. A rear wing, thirty-six feet by eighty, is now (Feb., 1857) in process of building, and all at a cost of about $40,000. A farm is attached of near 150 acres, the cost of which was $12,000.

It is now nearly three years since the school was opened, during which time two hundred and sixty-one have been received, and ninety discharged by expiration of sentences, indentures, &c., leaving our present number one hundred and seventy-one. Of all connected with the institution, in the judgment of enlightened charity, full three-fourths, or seventy-five in every one hundred boys, are thoroughly and permanently reformed. The others are benefited intellectually, and for the time are prevented from strengthening their habits of vice and crime.

The boys are employed in farming, in making ratan and willow baskets, in burnishing, in stitching shot-pouches and tape measures, in making and repairing their own clothes and shoes, in knitting stockings, and in the domestic work of the institution.

Owing in part to the state of the farm, and in part to the difficulty of obtaining suitable employment, and the lack of proper facilities for working in the building, the institution cannot meet only a part of its annual expenses. But it improves in its history and operations from year to year, and accomplishes an incalculable amount of good upon a class of persons whom no other means of education or reform would reach; and it is believed, as the people of the State become better acquainted with its working and results, they will complete the original plan, and sustain it with needful appropriations.

Roswell Hawley, M. D., is its present Superintendent.

CONNECTICUT TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION.

The fifth annual meeting of this Association was held at Meriden on Thursday and Friday, the 4th and 5th June. We learn from the Meriden Chronicle, which has a full report of the proceedings, that there was an unusually large delegation from all parts of the State. The number of teachers present Thursday is thought to be greater than has ever before been known at a similar meeting of this society the first day, since its organization. Thursday afternoon there were present sixty-eight male teachers and one hundred and forty-seven female. In the evening the large hall was crowded, and many were unable to find seats. The attendance on Friday was not as general, many of the delegates having returned to their homes, while a few came in on the trains. But, as a whole, the officers of the association have abundant reason to feel encouraged, that the great cause of common schools has enlisted so general an attention on the part of those most intimately connected with them.

The Committee to nominate officers for the ensuing year, reported the following ticket, which was subsequently elected :—

For President—T. W. T. Curtis, of Hartford.

For Vice Presidents—C. Goodwin Clark, of New Haven County ; Augustus Morse, Hartford County ; C. W. Todd, Litchfield County ; A. S. Wilson, Fairfield County ; John G. Lewis, Middlesex County ;

Amos Perry, New London County; E. R. Keys, Windham County; L. L. Camp, Tolland County.

For Recording Secretary—E. F. Strong, of Bridgeport.

For Corresponding Secretary—J. W. Tuck, of New Britain.

For Treasurer—F. C. Brownell, of Hartford.

We find the following among the resolutions passed by the Association :—

“ Whereas, M. T. Brown, Esq., late Principal of the Webster School, and an efficient member of this Association, has left this State for a new field of labor, Therefore, resolved, that this Association regrets the departure of one from our midst, possessing such eminent qualities as a Teacher, Educator, and Friend, and that our best wishes shall ever accompany him, that he reap that rich reward which is the fruit of true merit.

SCHOOL FUND.

SCHOOL FUND REPORT.—This is a document of 39 pages. The Commissioner is Albert Sedgwick, Esq., and his statement of the condition of the fund, and the business of his office during the past year, is clear and business-like. The revenue for the year has exceeded that of any previous one, its amount being \$148,815.86—and it would have been \$150,215.86, but for the omission of one bank, in which the sum of \$35,000 is invested, to make its usual semi-annual dividend. On the 2d of September the capital was \$2,046,397—which is less by \$3,555.73 than heretofore, in consequence of the sale of unproductive lands—chiefly in Ulster County, N. Y.—at much less than their former inventory. The Commissioner thinks that what remains of this sort of land should be sold at once. For the last three years the Commissioner has realized upon the whole capital $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.

Aggregate amount of dividends paid over by the managers of the School Fund for the support of Common Schools, from March, 1799, to March, 1857, a period of 59 years, is $4,660,042.58. This is realized from a cash capital of $1,200,000, besides paying its own expenses. This capital has been increased by the judicious sale of forfeited securities, to its present amount.

The number of children legally returned during the last year, was 11,545, a decrease of 275 from the previous year, and the amount of dividend $1.40 for each child between the ages of four and sixteen years.

The schools are provided for as follows :—

1st. In the annual dividend of the School Fund, amounting in 1857, to $143,193, being an average of $1.40 for each child between the age of four and sixteen years.

2d. In a portion of the revenue of the Town Deposit Fund, amounting by estimation in 1856, to $35,000.

3d. In the avails of a tax of one per cent. on the Grand List of each town, which yielded in 1856, the sum of $70,000.

4th. In the almost universal contribution, by the parents towards the board of the teacher, and the incidental expenses of the school, according to the number of children sent, amounting in 1836, to about $30,000.

5th. In the power which is exercised in most of the city and many village districts, of a property tax, not only for the construction, repairs and furniture for school houses, but for other school purposes, amounting by estimation to $150,000.

6th. In the avails of many local funds set apart for school purposes, in a majority of towns. In these ways the State has made liberal provision for the support of public schools; and in addition, has provided out of the avails of State taxation, for the education and improvements of teachers for the same schools in a Normal School at New Britain, and by a Teachers' Institute in each county; and for the instruction of her blind children in the New England Institute for the Blind at South Boston, and for the deaf mutes at the American Asylum at Hartford; and for her young criminals, at the Reform School at Meriden.

REMARKABLE EVENTS

OCCURRING WITHIN THE STATE OF CONNECTICUT, FROM NOVEMBER TO AUGUST, INCLUSIVE.

WE present but a meagre list of events in this number, for the reason that it was late in the winter before we had decided to get up the work.

Nov. 29.—Snow fell for the first time of sufficient depth to make sleighing.

TERRIBLE SNOW STORM.—Saturday, January 17, was a very mild and pleasant winter day. At night the wind hauled into the N. E., and it grew cold very fast. At 9 o'clock, P. M., the mercury had reached zero, and on Sunday morning it had fallen to 8° below, where it remained through the day, with a powerful easterly gale. In the evening it commenced snowing, and continued through the night and the whole of the next day a perfect tempest. Between two and three feet fell, and all the roads were packed full, and all travel interdicted. The Chapel Street Church spire was blown down, and two lofty spires in Waterbury were also prostrated, besides much damage in many other ways. On the seacoast the storm was very severe. "The oldest inhabitant" was utterly oblivious of any equal to it "in his remembrance."

January 23.—The coldest day of the season. Mercury fell, at New Haven, to 15° below zero, and in some portions of the State it went as low as 36° cypher.

LONG ISLAND SOUND FROZEN OVER.—For the first time, there is solid ice from the Connecticut shore to Long Island. Persons cross the Sound to Long Island on the ice from Port Chester, Westchester county, N. Y., and also from Throgg's Neck, near Fort Schuyler. The harbor at New Haven is frozen as tight as Baffin's Bay. An "unusual circumstance" is mentioned by the New Haven Register. That paper, of Monday evening, says that "Capt. Merrow, of the schooner Daniel Trowbridge, who has been for a week frozen in near Southwest Ledge, at the mouth of our harbor, reports that nothing but ice can be seen from his topmast, with a spy glass; that from Faulkner's Island across to Long Island, and from the former to the Connecticut shore, up to Branford, is a solid piece of ice. At ebb tide a large gap opens at the mouth of our harbor, closing again at flood tide. Thus Long Island and Connecticut are for the first time in the memory of man, connected by solid ice."—Hartford Times, January 27.

HARTFORD, Saturday, February 14, 1857.

The Plainville Knitting Factory, at Plainville, Farmington, was destroyed by fire yesterday afternoon, with all its machinery and contents. The loss is about $60,000; insured $58,000 in this city and Providence Companies. The company was a joint-stock one.

February.—A horrible murder in Bridgeport has lately come to light. It appears that a man named Blood, in a drunken fit, killed one William Burritt, and that after he had done the deed, and became sobered, confessed the crime to his neighbors. His statement was not credited till the body of the missing man was found in the cellar of the house where Blood resided. He was arrested, tried, and found guilty of manslaughter. He was sentenced to four years imprisonment, and to pay a fine of $100.

The dwelling house of James R. Coe, at the Old Forge, Hitchcockville, was burned last Monday evening, March 10. The fire is supposed to have taken from a spark dropped in the cellar. There was an insurance on the building of $1000—nearly sufficient to cover the loss.

As Mr. Ira Baker, a worthy farmer of Washington, Conn., was endeavoring to extract a charge from his gun, on Saturday, the 14th inst., his foot accidentally touched the trigger, causing the contents to be discharged through his heart, and producing instant death. He was 68 years of age, and leaves a family to mourn his sudden and premature death.

UNPRECEDENTED SNOW STORM.—A rain commenced falling here last Monday morning, which changed to partly snow as it fell. The storm continued without intermission, and with great violence until Tuesday evening, and Wednesday morning broke clear and cool over at least 12 inches of snow in our village. On the hill it was deeper, and badly drifted, so that digging was necessary in breaking out the roads. On Wallen's Hill the depth was fully 28 inches, in Winchester Center 20, in Colebrook and Norfolk 18 to 24, and in Sandisfield, fully two feet. Had it remained as it fell, and not melted, its depth must have been much greater. It is singular of this storm, that while it extended far to the south and west, whitening even the streets of Baltimore, and heavy in interior Pennsylvania, to the north of us, at Boston, Bangor, and even Haverhill, New Hampshire, there was neither rain nor snow, the weather being clear during the whole time. There was no snow at Hartford, very little at Collinsville, four or five inches only at Pleasant Valley, next to none at Plymouth, and a few inches at Wolcottville. It was the heaviest storm of the winter hereabouts, and will long be known and quoted as the Great Snow of April 21st, 1857.—Winsted Herald.

The body of a man, supposed to be about 30 years of age, was found in the Connecticut River, in the vicinity of South Windsor Congregational Church, on Tuesday, April 7th. The body was well dressed. The only articles found in the pockets were two keys and three cents. His collar was marked with the initials J. B.—Hartford Courant.

Cold for May. On Sunday, 17th of May, ice formed in Litchfield County the sixteenth of an inch in thickness.

Julius Smith was badly injured at the Pacific Iron Works in Salisbury, May 24. While engaged in "babiting a box," the air got into the mould, causing an explosion, and blowing the hot metal into his face and eyes.

The corner stone of the new Hartford Hospital was laid with considerable ceremony, on Wednesday, May 27. The State has given it $10,000.

On Sunday, May 31, a terrible storm, accompanied with hail, swept over the town of Salem, Conn., doing great injury to the crops. It continued for half an hour, during which time hail stones as large as a robin's egg fell, until the ground was covered to the depth of an inch. Much grain was completely ruined, and many fences and trees were prostrated by the violence of the storm.

A destructive fire occurred at New Britain, by which the large stockinet factory of the New Britain Knitting Company was mostly consumed, together with its extensive stock of machinery, and a large amount of stock and goods. The loss, we learn, will probably exceed $100,000; insurance $80,000, in Hartford, Providence and Springfield. The capital stock of the company was $150,000, and was all paid in. Eleven sets of card machines, and a quantity of knitting and other machines were destroyed. The company manufactured shirts and stockings of mixed wool and cotton, and employed 150 operatives, besides several hundred sewing girls. A fire-proof wall on the north end saved a section of 50 feet of the building, by which means some valuable machinery was saved. Origin of the fire not positively known.

This was the largest factory and the largest building in New Britain.

A runaway boy from the Reform School, at Meriden, by the name of Taylor, was arrested at Waterbury and placed in the lockup for safe keeping. During the night he fired the building, and was badly burned before he could be got out.

Joseph Wildman, a young man in the employ of Messrs. Barnum & Starr, of Danbury, on Friday afternoon last, while oiling a "hanger" over a planing machine, caught his clothes in the gearing, hurling him with terrible force against the ceiling, and stripping him of every vestige of his clothing. He then fell into the machine, which was in full operation, one foot being drawn under the knives, chopping up his leg nearly to the knee by piece-meal, before the machine could be stopped.

Mr. Russell Hubbard, a well known citizen of Norwich, on returning from church, on the first sabbath of June, felt unwell, and took some brandy to relieve him. With this he mixed, as he thought, some laudanum, hoping that it would do him good, but he soon became much worse, and died at eight o'clock in the evening. An examination showed that he had by mistake taken corrosive sublimate instead of laudanum. Mr. Hubbard was one of the firm of A. & R. Hubbard, paper manufacturers.

William Howland, an interesting lad 14 years of age, was drowned while bathing in the Farmington river, at Farmington, Wednesday, June 3.

A German, about 25 years of age, was killed on Tuesday evening, June 23, near the Bristol depot, by the railroad engine. He was walking upon the track of the road, and seemed not to notice the approaching train, though the whistle was blown. He was picked up in an insensible state, and died during the night.

The Hartford Times has the following romantic announcement:—Married at Willington, on the 20th ult., Asahel L. Beers, of Albany, N. Y., and Miss Ann Rider; their united ages are 124 years, and the courtship commenced 42 years since.

From the thirty-eighth annual report of the Ætna Insurance Company, it appears that its receipts for premiums were $1,587,556.71. Dividends have been paid to the amount of $125,000, and a net profit remains of $342,124.80. Losses paid during the year, $1,008,297.94. During the last four and a half years, the company has realized a profit of $1,132,404.81, an average of $251,645 yearly. Amount paid in by shareholders, $195,000, consequently the company has realized about one hundred and twenty-nine per cent. annually, upon the amount paid in.

HAVE YOU GOT YOUR LIFE INSURED? If not, you cannot do it too soon. It will cost you less now; every year added to your life, will add to the expense of getting insured. Now is the only certain time you have. Death lurks in every path and at every turn. See the advertisement of the "Manhattan Life Insurance Company," in the first part of this book. A. D. Jones is the agent of the company for Connecticut. Office 80 State Street, New Haven.

DEATHS OF EMINENT PERSONS

IN THE UNITED STATES AND ABROAD, DURING THE PAST YEAR.

Our year is intended to reckon from July to July. But as we had not decided upon issuing the Gazetteer until late in the autumn, we shall commence this record with December, 1856, and carry it up to July 1, 1857. In our subsequent volumes, we hope to make the record square.

DIED—DECEMBER.

In Edinburgh, Scotland, December 24th, Mr. Hugh Miller, editor of the Witness, the distinguished writer on geology. The Edinburgh Witness of Wednesday, in a supplement, thus briefly announces this sad event:—"Mr. Miller had been ill for some time—working hard and late at night, in completing his new work on geology. He had become, in consequence, subject to aggravated attacks of nightmare, which partook of the nature of somnambulism. Some time ago attempts had been made to break into his museum, and he in consequence, slept with a loaded revolver on the table by his side. Yesterday, on account of headache and unrefreshing sleep, he had seen his medical advisers, who had warned him of overwork, and prescribed suitably. Last night, according to their request, he had taken a warm sponge-bath, and retired early to rest. After having slept some considerable time, he had apparently awakened in a fit of nightmare, and, taking up the pistol, had reached the bedroom door as far as the bath, which had been left, after use, in the adjoining apartment. There the pistol had exploded, the bullet passing through the chest, and death must have been instantaneous. The sound not having been heard at this hour of the night by any of the household, Mr. Miller's body was not discovered till this morning."

December 21, of pyæmia, at his residence, the College, St. John's Wood, the Rev. John Harris, D. D., Principal of New College, London, aged fifty-four.

William C. Redfield died at his residence in New York, 20th inst., at the age of 68. His name has long been familiar in the annals of science, especially in the division of meteorology. Mr. Redfield was born at Middletown, Connecticut. As early as 1822 he was engaged in an attempt at steam navigation on the Connecticut, and soon after was one of a company that established a line of boats from Hartford to New York. In 1825 he came to New York, and at once engaged in steamboating on the Hudson. In 1828 he published a paper on a "Route of a Great Western Railway," to connect New York with Lake Erie and the great rivers of the Western States. Nearly thirty years afterwards the iron horse crossed the Mississippi at Rock Island, the precise place proposed in Mr. R's pamphlet. He was an early and efficient promoter of railroads on a smaller scale, along the Hudson and Connecticut valleys. Forty years ago he began to study the theory of storms, and has published from time to time many valuable papers upon meteorology, in the nautical Magazines, The American Journal of Science, and the journals of the day. He also devoted much attention to geology, and carefully investigated the fossil fishes of the red sandstone formation in Connecticut and New Jersey.

December 9—THE RIGHT REV. THEOBALD MATHEW, the great Irish Apostle of Temperance. He was born in Thomastown, Ireland, on the 10th of October, 1790. He was therefore 66 years and 2 months of age, at the time of his death. He was left an orphan at an early age; was adopted by an aunt of fortune, and educated at Kilkenny Academy, and afterwards at Maynooth College. He was admitted to orders in the Roman Catholic Church at the age of 24; immediately after which he took up his residence at College, and became deeply interested in the wants, necessities, and the sufferings of the poor. His labors, everywhere wonderfully successful, were turned principally to the suppression of intemperance. He worked day and night; he traveled all over Ireland, winning thousands from the gulf of destruction. He then went through Scotland, and afterwards England, everywhere seeing his efforts crowned with success. In 1849 and 1850, he visited the United States, and added tens of thousands to the immense roll of total abstainers in this country. The people followed and crowded round him with every demonstration of affection, and the public authorities showed him marks of distinguished consideration.

At Beirut, Rev. Dr. ELI SMITH. He was a missionary stationed at Beirut, and labored for many years in the conversion of the heathen and the reduction of the unwritten language of that country to a grammatical construction. He was a native of Connecticut, and a graduate of Yale College, of the class of 1821, and after due preparation and consecration for his arduous work, sailed for the foreign field of his labors in 1826.

LYDIA JOHNSON, a colored woman, residing in Brooklyn, N. Y., died at the advanced age of one hundred and five.

JANUARY.

At North Adams, 2d, Luke Flood, 76; he was one of the Irish patriots of Emmet's rebellion, was a bosom friend of Emmet, and on the failure of the rebellion and the capture and death of Emmet, escaped to this country.

Died at Wiscasset, Me., on the 5th, the Hon. Moses Carleton, having in October last reached the great age of ninety years. He survived his wife, who was ninety-three at her death, only one short month. He was betrothed at seventeen and married to her at twenty-one years of age, and they lived most happily and affectionately together, through many changes and afflictions of life, for sixty-nine years. Mr. Carleton was much known in the meridian of his life as one of the largest ship-owners in New England. But his prosperity was crushed by the Embargo and the last war with Great Britain. He was one of the councillors of Governor Gerry. In his adversity he became a farmer, and worked most industriously with his own hands, even to the last of his protracted life.

William Maxwell, LL. D., died at Williamsburgh, Va., the 10th Jan., aged 74. He was a native of Norfolk, in that State, and held a high position at the bar. He represented Norfolk at different times in both branches of the Legislature. He afterward received the appointment of Principal Professor of Hampden Sidney College, and subsequently became editor of The New York Journal of Commerce, which position he occupied for several years. At a late period of his life, he removed to Richmond, where, as is said of him by the Norfolk Herald, "his usefulness was manifested on all occasions requiring the exercise of talents, the grace of eloquence, the aid of judicious counsel, and a ready and helping hand—and ever with a noble disinterestedness which formed a shining characteristic of his nature.” While a resident of Richmond, he was chosen Secretary of the Virginia Historical Society, and editor of the Historical Register, a work which was to him a labor of love.

At Montpelier, Vt., on the 24th, the Hon. Samuel Prentiss, formerly a Senator from Vermont, and Judge of the United States District Court.

At Havana, Cuba, on the 16th of January, ELISHA KENT KANE, M. D., the well known Arctic explorer, in the thirty-sixth year of his age. Dr. Kane was born in the city of Philadelphia, Pa., was graduated at the University of Virginia, as a Doctor of Medicine, and soon after sailed with the American Embassy to China. He accompanied the first American Arctic Expedition, in search of Sir John Franklin, as surgeon of the expedition. The most striking act in the drama of his eventful life, was his famous exploration of the Arctic seas, in search of the remains of Sir John Franklin, in the years 1855–6. It was planned and executed alone by him, under the patronage of the government and private munificence.

In the purpose of his mission, he was eminently successful, and brought back the melancholy evidence of the destruction of Sir John's party in the midst of the Polar ice. He brought back also, an utterly broken constitution, which only sustained him long enough to give his valuable records of that terrible voyage to the world, through the press. His career was a brief and a glorious one, and he has left the world without one stain on the fair escutcheon of his honor.

At Annapolis, Md., on the 24th, the estimable and venerable consort of the late William Wirt.

The Rev. Dr. W. A. Medhurst, the well known missionary to China, died in London on the evening of January 24, only two days after landing in England on his return from China. He was sixty-one years of age. He reached London on the 22d of January, much exhausted, immediately took to his bed, and was insensible the whole of the day on which he died.

On the 25th, at his residence in Albemarle, Va., the Hon. Andrew Stevenson, formerly a prominent Virginia politician, member of Congress and Minister to England.

At Washington City, on the 27th, Hon. PRESTON S. BROOKS, M. C. for the city of Charleston, S. C. The name of Mr. B. has become notorious for his attack on Senator Sumner, of Massachusetts, in the Capitol of the United States.

FEBRUARY.

At "Pumpkin Patch Farm," Pennsylvania, Judy, the slave of John Brown, at the great age of one hundred and five years. She had obtained her freedom, through the generosity of her master, many years since, but remained in his family during her life. She retained to the last a vivid recollection of the stirring events of the Revolution, and the Old French War.

Dr. William Yates, who introduced vaccination into the United States, died at Morris, N. Y., on the 7th, at the great age of 90.

M. Michelot, the celebrated comedian of the Theatre Francais, has just died at his residence, Passy, in his 71st year. Michelot, with Talma, Fleury, Mdles. Duchenois, Mars and Georges, was one of the glories of the French stage. He was equally successful in tragedy and comedy. His last great characters were the Jeune Mari, in Henri III, and Don Carlos in Ernani.

Lord Ellesmere, a distinguished English peer, who is known in New York, having been Commissioner to the Crystal Palace, died on the 18th. He had considerable pretensions to authorship, poetry included. He inherited immense estates from the Duke of Bridgewater, and was known successively as Lord Francis Leveson Gower, Lord Francis Egerton, and Earl of Ellesmere. Two sons and two daughters, and his wife, came with him when he paid us a visit, and made many friends.

Dr. VOGEL, the celebrated African traveler, was assassinated by the savages near Waddy, about the first of the present month. The letter received by the British Consul at Tripoli, communicating the intelligence, is from Corporal Maguire, one of the Sappers sent out with Dr. Vogel, and is written from Kuka. Dr. Vogel had departed from that place comparatively alone, on a most perilous journey eastward, with the view of reaching the Nile. He is said to have advanced through Birgirmi into Waddy, and to have been there murdered. A similar report reached this country some time since of Dr. Barth, who has returned to Europe alive and well; but in the present instance the rumor comes on better authority.

AN ANCIENT FAMILY.—Died at Hamburg, Erie county, February 22d, Enos Williams, aged 92 years. He was the last of the family of Jonathan Williams, Esq., late of Lebanon county, consisting of nine persons, whose united ages amount to over 700 years, averaging about eighty years each. Few families have attained so great an age. They were firm adherents to the American cause during the Revolution, and shared largely in the toils and privations of that eventful period, several of the sons at different periods being attached to the regular army. Ebenezer, the eldest, joined it as lieutenant, under Gen. Gates, near Cambridge, previous to the battle of Bunker's Hill, and continued in the service till the close of the war. He was engaged in several of the hardest fought battles; was present at the surrender of Burgoyne, and also at the battle of Monmouth; was entrusted with the charge of King's Ferry during the possession of New York by the British, and at Yorktown (the day on which he was thirty-four years old—he died at the age of ninety-eight) led the forlorn hope in storming the British batteries, which resulted in the surrender of Lord Cornwallis and the establishment of the Independence of the United States.

MARCH.

Hiram Rowe, "the oyster man," died at Fair Haven, Connecticut, on the 2d inst., aged 51. He has been engaged in the oyster trade for over 20 years.

At Akabah, March 21st, the Rev. William Parsons Lunt, D. D., of Quincy, Mass. Dr. L. left home last December to make the European tour, and was expected back early this summer. No particulars in regard to his death have as yet transpired.

Dr. L. was the son of Mr. Henry Lunt, formerly a well known and active merchant in Boston, and still living. He graduated at Harvard College in 1823. He was first settled as pastor of the Second Unitarian Church in New York, (now the Church of the Messiah,) and thence removed to Quincy in 1835.

HON. SAMUEL ZIMMERMAN, a man of great influence in the business of Canada, and an eminent railroad contractor and banker, was killed on the 13th of March, at the terrible railroad accident which occurred on the Great Western Railroad, between Hamilton and Toronto, U. C., and by which 180 persons lost their lives.

APRIL.

Rev. Calvin Colton, D. D., whose death recently occurred at Savannah, Ga., where he had gone on account of declining health, was, at the time of his decease, Professor of "Political Economy" in Trinity College, Hartford, Ct. He was graduated at Yale College in 1812, and ordained a Presbyterian clergyman in 1815, and was settled at Batavia, New York, until 1826, when he partially lost the use of his voice. This induced him to devote his time to writing for periodicals, but in 1835, after a visit to Europe, he took Episcopal orders. Subsequently, however, he turned his attention to political matters. The Chair of Political Economy, in Trinity College, was established for his especial occupancy.

At Washington City, D. C., early in this month, JOHN TYSSOWSKI, one of the most heroic of that band of republican Poles, whose zeal for freedom doomed him to perpetual exile from his native country. In 1848 he fled to the United States, whither his family had gone before him, and after a hard struggle for a year with biting poverty, he removed to Washington city, upon a call from his compatriot, Major Tochman, and was engaged as draughtsman for Congress. In 1851 he was appointed clerk in the Treasury Department, and in 1853 was transferred to the Examining Corps of the Patent Office, where his extensive knowledge, clear reasoning power, and remarkable executive talent commanded universal esteem, and he was required to act as chief examiner, although receiving the salary of assistant. This office he filled at the time of his decease.

MAY.

In New York city, on the 12th of May, Hon. Thomas J. Oakley. He was born in Dutchess Co. in 1783, graduated at Yale College at the age of eighteen, and studied law in the office of the father of Judge Ruggles, in Poughkeepsie. He was a man universally respected, and has filled many high and important posts in the service of his country.

At Waterbury, Conn., on the 16th, in the seventieth year of his age, J. M. L. Scovill, Esq., founder and chief proprietor of the Scovill Manufacturing Company, of Waterbury. He was one of the wealthiest men in the place.

At Augusta, Geo., 25th inst., Hon. ANDREW P. BUTLER, at the time of his decease a member of the United States Senate.

On the 26th, at his residence in Guilford, N. H., Hon. JAMES BELL. He had just been elected to a seat in the Senate of the United States for a full term.

Robert Burns, the eldest son of the poet, died at Dumfries, late in the present month. He had been ailing for some time, and his decease was not unexpected, his two brothers, Colonel William Burns and Lieut. Colonel James Burns, who are usually resident in Cheltenham, having both been in Dumfries for several days past, in anticipation of the event. Mr. Robert Burns was a man of very considerable ability, and displayed something of hereditary talent in the production of various songs, one or two of which are of more than average merit. Early in life he entered a government situation in London, from which he retired on a pension, and has been resident a number of years in his native town.

JUNE.

Royal L. Gay, Esq., a prominent citizen of Stamford, died in that place on the 21st inst., aged 76. He was born in Stafford, November 4th, 1780, and removed to Stamford in 1809. In 1835 he was elected Selectman, and as a proof of the confidence of the people of his adopted town, he was annually elected to that office for twenty years in succession. In 1842 he was elected Town Treasurer, and held the office from that time to the day of his death.

Hon. AUGUSTUS YOUNG, State Naturalist, and formerly a member of Congress from the State of Vermont, died at St. Albans, the place of his residence, on the 16th of the present month.

On the 25th, at his residence in Barnstable, Mass., the Hon. ZENO SCUDDER, formerly a member of Congress from that district.

The Charleston (S. C.) News, of June 26, appears in mourning for the death of the Hon. Langdon Cheves, which occurred in Columbia on the previous evening. The deceased was one of the most eminent sons of South Carolina. He was born in September, 1776, on a branch of Calhoun's Creek, Abbeville District, and was consequently in the 81st year of his age.

On the evening of the 24th of this month, an awful calamity occurred on the river St. Lawrence. The steamer Montreal was burned, and over 300 persons perished. Among them was the Hon. STEPHEN CLARENDON PHILLIPS, of Salem, Mass. He was one of nature's noblemen, and he succeeded in securing the love and good will of every one whose privilege it was to know him intimately, and his loss created a profound sensation throughout the whole country. At his home in Salem, all the church bells were tolled, the flags of the shipping and of the public buildings were displayed at half mast; and touching allusions made to the public services and private virtues of the deceased, in the pulpits of the several churches. Mr. Phillips was 55 years of age, was a graduate of Harvard, and represented Essex South in Congress, from 1834 to 1838. He was a man of great liberality and public spirit, and his death is a loss to Salem and the whole State. Mr. P. was a whig until 1848, when he joined the free soil party, and was their candidate for governor two years.

Persons desirous of comfortable houses for the coming winter, are referred to the advertisement of Mr. Hills, on the first page of this book.

BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

It is the intention of the Publisher to have this department of the "CONNECTICUT BOOK," as correct as the circumstances of the case will allow. Some few mistakes will doubtless have crept into this, our first number, owing to the many difficulties always attendant upon a new enterprise. If any person in the State finds himself left out, or in any way misrepresented, if he will drop us a line with the necessary corrections, we will cheerfully make it right in subsequent volumes.

 Let those afflicted with complaints of the Bronchial Vessels or Lungs, look at the Advertisement headed COLDS AND COUGHS.

 Have you got your LIFE INSURED? If not, go at once to the MANHATTAN LIFE INSURANCE OFFICE. See Advertisement in this book. A. D. JONES is Agent for the State of Connecticut. Office No. 80 State Street, New Haven, Conn.

 Don't overlook J. M. EMERSON & Co's Advertisement of that most magnificent of all the Monthlies, Emerson's and Putnam's Magazine.

 In these days of "APPALLING DISASTERS" at sea, the Advertisement of F. Ashley, in another part of our book, deserves peculiar attention.

MISCELLANEOUS.

UNDER this general head, will be found various statistical and other matters of interest, not to be found under any specific head. This will be found a very interesting department of our "Business Book," and should not be overlooked.

BANKING IN CONNECTICUT.

We gather the following statistics from the Report of our Bank Commissioners, for the current year:—

The entire Banking capital in the State is $20,505,730; being an increase over last year of $1,653,600.

The circulation, on the first of April, was $9,690,969, an increase of about $500,000 over last year; and the amount of specie was $1,121,120.

The whole amount of loans and discounts was $32,639,030. Excess over last year, $4,562,720; $6,681,920 being to parties out of the State.

The whole amount of resources is $39,123,660, and of deposits, $5,736,725, an excess in the latter of nearly $1,000,000 since last year's Report. The accumulated surplus being $1,712,000, all indicating a continued and healthful prosperity which cannot fail to give renewed satisfaction and confidence in our Banking institutions, both at home and abroad.

The whole number of regular Banks, in operation or going immediately into operation, is SEVENTY-FIVE.

JUDGES OF U. S. SUPREME COURT.

We give the names, age, and time of appointment of the several Judges of the Supreme Court of the United States. The Opinion in the Dred Scott Case has probably awakened more interest in this Court than was ever felt before.

Hon. John McLean, a native of New Jersey, is the oldest member of the present Bench in point of commission. He was appointed by Jackson in 1829. He is 72 years of age.

Hon. James M. Wayne, a native of Savannah, Georgia, holds the next oldest appointment, having received it in January, 1835. He is seventy years of age, and down to the time of his appointment was an active and ardent politician of the Jackson school.

Hon. Roger B. Taney, Chief Justice, was born on St. Patrick's Day, 1777. He was a very bitter partisan politician, so much so that the Senate rejected his appointment as Secretary of the Treasury; also as Associate Justice; but after the death of Chief Justice Marshall, he received the appointment of Chief Justice, in March, 1836, and was confirmed.

Hon. John Catron was born in Western Virginia, but since his youth has been a resident of Tennessee. His age is 65. He served one campaign under Jackson.

Thus far all the incumbents of the present Bench were appointed by Jackson.

Hon. Peter V. Daniel is a native of Virginia, and a descendant of one of the English families. He was born in 1786, and is consequently 71 years of age. He was offered the post of Attorney General by Jackson, but declined it. He was afterwards appointed U. S. District Judge for Virginia, and upon the death of Judge Barbour, was nominated as Associate Justice by Mr. Van Buren, in 1840.

Hon. Samuel Nelson is a native of Cooperstown, New York, and was appointed by Mr. Polk in 1845. He is about 65 years of age.

Hon. Robert C. Grier was born in Cumberland County, Pennsylvania, March 5th, 1794, and is consequently a little over 63 years of age. His life, previous to going upon the Bench, was divided between the law and academic pursuits. He was appointed by Mr. Polk.

Hon. Benjamin R. Curtis is a native of Massachusetts, born November 4, 1809, and is consequently nearly 48 years old. He never was a politician, but was taken by Mr. Fillmore from the Bar, and placed upon the Bench, in September, 1851.

Hon. John A. Campbell was born in Alabama, and was a lawyer of distinction in Mobile. He was appointed to the Bench in 1853, by General Pierce. His age is about 54 years.

ALLOTMENT OF JUDGES OF THE SUPERIOR COURT OF CONNECTICUT, FOR 1857-8.

THE COLD TERM OF JANUARY, 1857.

It is conceded on all hands that the "Cold Spell" of January, 1857, exceeded anything of the kind which has occurred in this country since the memorable winter of 1780, in which our ill clad army of the Revolution suffered so severely. We select the following from the newspapers of the day:—

Boston and Vicinity, Jan. 22.—The weather last night and this morning was the coldest of the season. At East Boston, on the hill, the thermometer stood 20 degrees below zero. At South Reading it was 23 below, and at Malden 20, with the snow blowing into huge drifts.

The thermometer, early this morning, in this city, indicated a temperature of from 15 to 17 degrees below zero. At half past eight o'clock the mercury stood 11 below zero at the corner of Milk street. At same place at twelve o'clock, $5\frac{1}{2}$ below zero.

In Waltham, in a warm situation, a thermometer, which, on Friday morning stood at 14 degrees below, indicated this morning a temperature of 6 degrees lower. In another place on the low grounds of the same town, the mercury, which on Friday was 18 below, stood at 28 below. In Woburn, a standard thermometer stood at 24 below, or 7 degrees lower than on Friday. In Lowell, at sunrise this morning, the thermometer stood at 28 degrees below. On Friday the same instrument stood at 19 below.

In Malden the mercury ranged from 28 to 31 degrees below zero. At Somerville, on low land, 24 below. On Central Hill, within half a mile of the place where it stood at 24, it was only 4 below at the same hour. In Methuen and Lawrence 32 below zero. In West Roxbury, 28 below.

At Newtonville, this morning, the mercury stood at 24 and 26 degrees below. At West Newton, 27 and 30 below.

At Concord the thermometer was all the way from 22 to 29 degrees below zero. At Waltham we hear of one as low as 32.

Dover, (N. H.), Jan. 24.—The thermometer this morning 31 degrees below zero; clear and still, wind west. The average temperature here yesterday (23d) was twenty below.

Bangor, Jan. 24.—At the residence of Hon. Elijah S. Hamlin, on Court street, at sunrise this morning the thermometer stood at forty-four degrees below zero ! At some other places not below 38.

White River Junction, Jan. 24.—43 below ; thermometer frozen in several places. At Woodstock, 43 below ; at Dartmouth College, 30 below, being the coldest ever recollected there. The railroads are all more or less blocked ; yesterday's train from Montreal not in yet.

Northfield, Vt., Jan. 24.—7 A. M., 40 below ; clear.

Manchester, N. H., Jan. 24.—7 A. M., 35 to 40 below.

Woodstock, Vt., Jan. 24.—From five to seven o'clock this A. M., the thermometer in some localities was 43 below, and mercury congealed in many places. Clear and still.

The Cold.—The Albany Evening Journal gives a table showing the temperature at principal points in the country during the latter part of the cold winter of 1834-5 :—

New York,	7 below 0
Saco, Me.,	23 " 0
Portsmouth,	20 " 0
Salem,	17 " 0
Newburyport,	13 " 0
Lowell,	24 " 0

Boston,	15 " 0
Worcester,	19 " 0
Hartford,	27 " 0
New Haven,	33 " 0
Goshen, N. Y.,	32 " 0
Albany,	32 " 0
Newark,	13 " 0
Philadelphia,	4 " 0
Baltimore,	10 " 0
Washington,	16 " 0
Montreal,	35 " 0

The harbors of Portland, Newburyport, Boston, New Bedford, New Haven, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, were frozen over.

The lowest mark touched by the thermometer on Saturday, as far as reported, was attained at Bangor, Maine, where one marked forty-four degrees below zero. This must have been marked by a spirit thermometer. At Woodstock, Vt, the thermometer reached 43 degrees below, between 5 and 7. A. M.

Rain in 1856.—Mr. Jonathan Clark, of Hampton, for these many years a careful noter of the phenomena and changes of the weather, in writing a business letter to us, adds the following memoranda:—

“Amount of rain that fell and water from melted snow, in each month in the year 1856, in Hampton, Conn.:—January, 3.19 inches; February, 1.13 inches; March, 1.36 inches; April, 2.87 inches; May, 5.37 inches; June, 1.63 inches; July, 1.87 inches; August, 11.50 inches; September, 3.88 inches; October, 0.97 inches; November, 2.37 inches; December, 3.87 inches. Total in the year, 40 inches.

“In the year 1855, 37.38 inches of rain and snow water were marked. On the 18th and 19th of August, 1856, in the space of about 36 hours, about 5 inches of water fell; while in all the month of October only 97 hundredths of an inch fell, as seen by the table.”

THE OYSTER TRADE.

THE OYSTER BUSINESS is quite extensively carried on in various parts of Connecticut; but FAIR HAVEN, the Eastern Precinct of the old Town of New Haven, is the great center of operations. We had engaged a friend to procure the statistics of this business in Fair Haven, but he, not having attended to it from pressure of business, we avail ourself of the following communication to the New York Tribune, written by one who has taken the trouble to investigate the matter. We hope in our next volume to be able to give a more particular and statistical account.

EDITOR.

NEW HAVEN, December, 1856.

Although a resident of this city for fifteen or twenty years, and, as I had supposed, tolerably well posted relative to its many sources of prosperity, I was not, till within a few days, aware of the importance of one branch of business in adding to the wealth of this community. I refer to the Oyster Trade; and notwithstanding our place has been noted for it for a long period, I doubt whether many, even of our most intelligent citizens, have any very adequate conception of its extent or importance, or the influence its discontinuance would have upon the growth of this vicinity. Fair Haven—a flourishing suburb of this town and of East Haven, lying upon both sides of the Quinnipiac River—is the great depot for the business, and has been almost entirely built up and populated through the influence of this species of shell fishery. It is here that the many operations connected with the trade can be said to commence, although the greater portion of the bivalves are brought from waters of the Chesapeake Bay.

On a brief visit to Fair Haven a few days since, I obtained some meager statistics relative to this branch of industrial pursuits, which were interesting to me, and possibly may be so to your readers, especially that portion of them residing in the Western States. As I have already stated, the oysters are principally taken in Chesapeake Bay and its tributary rivers and inlets, and thence transported to Fair Haven, where they are "planted" or laid down in our waters, or else taken immediately from the vessel to the various places occupied by the many employed in opening, packing, and otherwise preparing them for market. The whole number of vessels engaged in the transportation of oysters to this place is about 80, mostly schooners, each capable of carrying cargoes varying from 2,000 to 4,500 bushels. These vessels are generally owned in Fair Haven, but in busy seasons their number is largely increased by chartered craft. The amount of capital invested in this business cannot fall much short of $1,000,000, and perhaps exceeds that amount, though I could not get any very correct data to form a decided estimate.

The modus operandi of preparing the oyster for market is novel, and divided into several distinct departments. There are the openers, the washers, the measurers, the fillers, the packers, &c., each of which performs only the duties pertaining to its own division. At this season of the year, few of the oysters are "planted," but are generally taken directly from the vessel to the places occupied by the openers, who form a large number of operatives, and are composed of females and boys, who earn from \$5 to \$9 per week. An expert at this branch will open 100 quarts per day, but the average is not, perhaps, over 65 quarts. The standard price is, I think, $2\frac{1}{2}$ cents per quart. This work gives employment to many hundreds, and much of the work is performed at private dwellings, thus affording opportunity for labor to many who cannot go into a general workshop. The oysters, as they come from the vessel, are heaped up in the center of the room, the operatives occupying the wall sides. Each person has before him a small desk or platform, some three feet in height, on which is placed, as occasion requires, about half a bushel of oysters, from which the opener takes his supply. On the stand is a small anvil, on which, with a small hammer, the edge of the shell is broken. The operative is provided with a knife and hammer, both of which are held in the right hand at the time the shell is broken, when the latter is dropped, and knife does its work. Two tubs or pails, of about three gallons capacity each, are placed within about three feet of the workman, into which he throws, with great dexterity and rapidity, the luscious morsel which is to tickle the palate and gratify the taste of some dweller in the Far West. The object of placing these vessels of reception so far from the operator, is to prevent, as much as possible, the deposit of the original liquor with the oyster; for, strange as it may appear, none of that liquor is deposited in the kegs or cans which convey the oyster to market, as they are all thoroughly washed in fresh water, and into each keg, according to its size, is poured a certain quantity of the same fluid. From the opening room the oysters are taken to the filling room, and thence to the packing department. In the filling room, on a platform, are placed a dozen or more kegs or cans, with the bungs out. The oysters are first poured into a large hopper pierced with holes, in which they are thoroughly washed and drained, when they are ready to be deposited in packages. This is done by placing a funnel in the aperture of the keg, by one person, while another "measures and pours." This operation is performed with great rapidity, two or three men being able to fill some 2,000 kegs in a day. After depositing the requisite quantity of "solid oysters," as they are termed, in each package, a pipe conveying fresh water is applied, and the vacant space filled with nature's beverage—the bungs placed and driven home—when one of the greatest delicacies of the world is ready to start on its uncertain journey, for it may not reach the shores of Lake Erie, and yet it may be "gulped down" by some appreciative genius on the plains of Kansas, or still farther from its starting point.

During the warm season, or from April till December, the kegs are packed in boxes holding from sixteen to twenty-four, and surrounded with broken ice. In cold weather they are transported in bulk. The result of each day's labor is dispatched to some Northern or Western depot, and thence distributed to subordinate stations. This portion of the business is transacted with all the precision and regularity of the United States Mails. The Hartford and New Haven Railroad are at present running from six to ten cars daily, loaded with oysters, mostly destined for the Western market, though a portion pass up the Connecticut valley, and find their way into Canada East. A large portion of that section of country is supplied with oysters from Fair Haven.

I cannot, perhaps, give a more intelligible impression of the extent of this large and increasing interest, than by recording some facts connected with the business of one among the many large houses concerned in the trade. I select that of Rowe & Co., which has been in the business some twelve years, and their market is almost entirely north and west of Buffalo. This firm, which consists of three members, has two starting points, Norfolk, Va., and Fair Haven, Conn., and three principal depots—Buffalo, Detroit, and Hamilton, C. W. Fair Haven is the headquarters East, and Buffalo at the West. Their Norfolk house, although at certain seasons it forwards opened oysters north, mainly attends to the buying of the oysters in the shell, and sending them to Fair Haven, or "planting" them on the grounds owned by the firm in the Nanticoke River, (some 1,800 acres,) or in the waters near Norfolk. Their object in "planting" oysters South, where they lie over one season, is to obtain a larger article than they could otherwise. They keep one person constantly employed South in searching for and buying the extra quality, and they keep their boats "planting" the year through.

This Company have in their employ over twenty vessels plying between Chesapeake Bay and Fair Haven, of which they are whole or part owners, and yet their demands are such that they are obliged to charter many more. These vessels, except for a month or two during the Bahama fruit season, are engaged entirely in the transportation of cargoes from the waters of the Chesapeake to those of New Haven.

Messrs. R. & Co. open and put up daily at Fair Haven from 900 to 1,200 kegs, and from 800 to 1,000 cans during the busy season, and at Norfolk also a large quantity, but we have not the figures for the latter place. Their number of openers is from 125 to 140, and they also employ about twenty other operatives. The cans are of tin, similar in shape to sardine boxes, but of greater capacity. Those packed in cans are designed mostly for the Cincinnati and other markets in that direction. The cans are manufactured by themselves, on their own premises; but the kegs, in which much the larger quantity are transported, are made to order, and their yearly consumption is 150,000, at a cost of about $15,000. They paid the New York Central Railroad, last year, $15,000 freight money, but this only includes transportation to Buffalo, to which should be added large amounts for transportation still further north and west.

This house has its distributing office at Buffalo, from whence its branches extend to Toronto in Canada, and to St. Louis and St. Paul on the Mississippi, embracing a large portion of the principal intermediate points.

CONNECTICUT ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY YEARS AGO.—In 1756, there were 6 counties and 73 towns in the Colony of Connecticut. The number of white inhabitants was 126,995; of negroes, 3,019; of Indians, 617; total, 130,611. Litchfield County included Barkhamsted, Canaan, Colebrook, Cornwall, Goshen, Hartland, Harwinton, Kent, Litchfield, New Hartford, New Milford, Norfolk, Salisbury, Sharon, Torrington, Winchester and Woodbury. Six hundred and seventeen Indians were counted in New London County, though there must have been others in other parts of the State. Litchfield County had the smallest number of inhabitants; Barkhamsted having only 18; Hartland, 12; Norfolk, 84; and Winchester, 24.

The largest population was in Norwich, which had 5,540; and the next was Middletown, with 5,463; and the next New Haven, with 5,085. Hartford had 3,027, of which 101 were negroes. Farmington, 3,707, and Windsor, 4,250, then ranked above Hartford, as did Wallingford, 3,713; New London, 3,171; Stonington, 3,518; Fairfield, 4,455; Norwalk, 3,050; Stratford, 3,058; and Lebanon, 3,274.

In 1773, there was another census of the Colony, which gave 191,292 whites and 6,454 blacks; total, 197,746.

It must be remembered that the towns mentioned above covered a very much greater territory than they do now, most of them having been divided several times.

NEW HAVEN IN OLD TIMES.—The Middletown Gazette of October 8, 1787, printed by Woodward & Green, a few rods north of the Post-Office, gives the census of inhabitants, etc., in New Haven at that date, as follows: Whole number, 3,364, of which 176 were students of Yale College; 446 houses; 103 stores; 324 barns and shops, "a large and elegant State House," and four houses of public worship. The same paper gives an account of Commencement at Yale for that year, and among the young graduates, we observe the names of Roger Sherman, Gideon Granger, Moses Atwater, and James Wadsworth.

The Danbury Times, instead of cheaply filling up its columns with Congressional reports and the Burdell murder, has been giving, in a series of interesting articles, a sketch of the "Rise and Progress of Hatting" in that town. Eighty years ago, in a little red shop, one journeyman and two apprentices worked at the business. Now, after an account of each establishment, the Times sums up as follows:

Amount of sales per annum,	$947,000
" Capital invested,	260,000
Number of Males employed,	743
" Females "	258
" Hats turned off per annum,	106,160 doz.
" Fur Hats formed,	720,873
Amount of Cash paid to hands per annum,	$416,000
" Coal consumed,	1,870 tons.
" Steam power,	223 horse.

Machinery in use: Sewing Machines, 17; Fur Hat Forming, 8; Fur Blowing, 10; Carding, 12; Sizing, 22.

MAIL COMMUNICATION BETWEEN NEW YORK AND BOSTON NINETY-EIGHT YEARS Ago.—Post-Office, New York, Feb. 3, 1755.—It being found very inconvenient to persons concerned in trade, that the Post from New York to New England has heretofore set out but once a fortnight, during the Winter season; the stages are now altered by order of the Postmaster General, and the New England Post is henceforth to go once a week the year round, whereby correspondence may be carried on, and answers obtained to letters between New York and Boston in two weeks, which used in the Winter to require four weeks, and between Philadelphia and Boston in three weeks, which used to require six weeks. But to obtain this good end, it is necessary, on account of the badness of the ways and weather in Winter, to dispatch the Post some hours sooner from New York. Notice is therefore hereby given, that he begins his weekly stage on Monday next, being the 10th instant, and will be dispatched precisely at 9 o'clock in the morning on that day, and every Monday following.

ALEXANDER COLDEN, Postmaster.

New York Mercury, Feb. 3, 1755.

THE GREAT FLOOD.—On Thursday, the 27th day of April, 1854, a severe Northeast rainstorm commenced, and continued incessantly for three days, causing the water to rise in the Connecticut River and all its tributaries to an unprecedented height. The water rose several feet higher than had been known since the settlement of the country. The city of Hartford was partly inundated, and the banks of the river were overflowed throughout nearly its whole course. A large amount of property, estimated by some as high as $2,000,000, was destroyed.

Another unusually high flood occurred in August, 1856, causing much destruction of crops, as corn, potatoes, English grain, hay, grass, etc. Many persons lost their entire year's crop.

OLDEST MAN IN AMERICA.—A correspondent of the Cassville (Ga.) Standard says that there is now living in Murray County, Georgia, on the waters of Holly Creek, a Revolutionary veteran who has attained the age of 134 years. His name is John Hames. He is known throughout the region in which he lives by the appellation, "Gran'sir Hames." Gran'sir is contracted for Grandsire. A grandsire he truly is. As I was on my way to visit this relic of the expired eighteenth century, I inquired of an oldish gentleman of about sixty, if he knew him. "Oh yes, I know him," said he, "he is my grandfather!"

John Hames was born in Mecklenburg County, Va., and was a lad ten years old when Washington was in his cradle. He was thirty-two when Braddock met his defeat in the Monongahela. He and several of his neighbors set forth to join the headstrong and ill-fated commander, but, after several days' march, were turned back by the news of his overthrow. He migrated to South Carolina nearly one hundred years ago. He was in thirteen considerable conflicts during the War of Independence, and in skirmishes and encounters with Indians, with Tories and with British, times beyond memory. He was with Gates at Camden, with Morgan at the Cowpens, with Greene at Hillsboro' and Eutaw, and with Marion in many a bold rush into a Tory camp or red-coat quarters.

In this world of sin and vanity, it is a pleasant fact that the mind will sometimes turn from "the busy cares of earth," and revert to former times, "when life was all a mellow dream." An Ohio poet lately visited the home of his childhood, and after seeing his parents, wended his way to the old church, which it seems was being torn down. The scene was too much for the poet, and with a gush of anguish, he indited the following pathetic lines:

"Fairwell, old church
Of mi boyhood; witnesser of kat
Tykisms and bakakes a leanink onto Strate seats, kausing me many a spank ink at home for not sitting strate
To meeting—old church, Good Bye!

NEWSPAPERS.—The first newspaper published in the Colony of Connecticut, was the Connecticut Gazette, established at New Haven, in 1755. It was published about thirteen years. The second paper was the New London Summary, established August 8, 1758; and the third paper the Connecticut Courant, established in 1764.

Hon. Asa Bacon, recently deceased in New Haven in a good old age, left by his last will and testament the sum of $1,000 to the American Tract Society in New York, $1,000 to the American Sunday School Union in Philadelphia, and also the sum of $2,000 to Yale College, in addition to $8,000 previously subscribed by him for this institution.

THE OLD "RED CENT."—As the old "red cent" is about being called in, some of our contemporaries are writing its history and obituary. The cent was proposed in 1782, by Robert Morris, the great financier of the Revolution, and was named by Jefferson, two years later. It began to make its appearance from the mint in 1792. It bore then the head of Washington on one side, and thirteen links on the other. The French Revolution soon after created a rage for French ideas in America, which put on the cent, instead of the head of Washington, the head of the Goddess of Liberty—a French Liberty, with neck thrust forward, and flowing locks. The chain on the reverse was replaced by the olive wreath of peace. But the French Liberty was short lived, and so was her portrait on our cent. The present staid, classic dame, with a fillet around her hair, came into fashion about thirty or forty years ago, and her finely chiseled Grecian features have been but slightly altered by the lapse of time.

The new cent is about the size of a quarter eagle, but much thicker, and nearly of the color of German silver. The obverse is a well executed figure of an eagle in flight, with the date underneath, and the words "United States of America" above. The converse is a finely executed wreath, representing all the principal staples of the country—cotton, corn, tobacco, wheat, grapes, etc.—with the words ONE CENT in the center.

WHEREVER USED, IT GIVES SATISFACTION.

It will wash twelve shirts or their equivalent, say 30 yards of cloth, in from ten to fifteen minutes, according to their condition; will wash bed quilts and the heaviest articles, and is equally good on the finest fabrics.

IT BREAKS NO BUTTONS, DOES NOT WEAR THE CLOTHES

one-half so much as the wash board, and saves more than one-half the

of washing. It is light, portable, durable, not at all liable to get out of repair, is made in the most perfect and substantial manner, and is easy to operate. It is the only machine that washes clothing upon true scientific principles, and is warranted to do the work in the most satisfactory manner, if the directions, which are simple, are followed.

Made and sold by DAVID LYMAN, MIDDLEFIELD, Conn.

This is to certify that we have used the "METROPOLITAN WASHING MACHINE" in our laundries for several days, and consider it a most valuable labor-saving machine. We find it all that the proprietor claims it to be, saving more than half the time, labor and expense of washing, without doing the least injury to the clothes.—[H. "Emerson" and "Putnam."

The friends of these favorite Monthlies will be pleased to learn that in their consolidation the best literary and artistic talent of both publications has been secured, and that the most attractive features of each will be retained in the combined work.

In its literary tone, and in its pictorial embellishments, the publishers will spare no pains or expense to make it a worthy representative of American literature and American art.

In its criticisms it will aim to be just and truthful, and in its discussions fearless and independent.

It will be purely national in its character, and will be careful to preserve and cultivate that wholesome, moral and religious tone so highly cherished by the American public, and so essential to the welfare of the race.

We hope to merit the continued favor of all the old friends of both "Putnam" and "Emerson," and to make hosts of new ones in all quarters.

Though the consolidated Magazine will contain a few less pages, yet there being nearly one-third more matter on each page, each number will contain as much as "Putnam" since the enlargement.

All subscribers having paid in advance for either of the Magazines, will receive the combined work to the full amount of their subscriptions.

TERMS—Three Dollars a year; Single copies, 25 cents.

For sale by all Booksellers and News Dealers. A liberal percentage allowed to Postmasters and Agents for circulating the Magazine.

CLUBS—Two copies, FIVE DOLLARS; Five copies, TEN DOLLARS. A splendid LIBRARY of FORTY LARGE BOUND VOLUMES is presented to every person who gets up a Club of 24 subscribers. Full particulars on application. We prefer that Clubs shall not be formed where the Magazine is for sale in the trade.

We will furnish any of the readers of "Putnam" the July, August and September numbers of "Emerson," containing the opening chapters of the "Life of Washington," for fifty cents. The "Life of Washington" will be continued through the next volume, and the whole will be illustrated with several hundred fine original engravings.

"My Thirty Years Out of the Senate," by Major Jack Downing, was commenced in the January number of "Emerson," 1857, and will be continued through several numbers more. The letters embraced in each number will be found of exceeding interest, not only for their humor and drollery, but also for their historical character.

Volumes commence in July and January, yet subscribers may commence at any time.

Any of the nine volumes of "Putnam" that have been published, neatly bound in cloth, may be had through any bookseller or news agent, price $2 each, or half morocco, $3. As the plates are about to be melted up, this is the last opportunity that will be offered for obtaining a set of this standard American work.

Four volumes of "Emerson" have been published. Vols. I, II and III, elegantly bound and profusely illustrated, can be obtained at $1.50 each, and Vol. IV at $2.

Odd numbers of back volumes furnished when desired.

PATENT MARINE WATER-PROOF FLOATING SAFE,

For the preservation of MONEY, PAPERS, and other valuables, in case of disaster or wreck to ships and other vessels.

For the transportation of SPECIE, JEWELS, WATCHES, LACES, EAST INDIA GOODS, and other extra-valuable freight, and for other purposes requiring buoyancy and security from water and dampness.

In case of wreck, this Safe is to be thrown overboard and taken in tow. Where total loss occurs, it will float off and keep on the surface until picked up.

F. ASHLEY, Westport, Conn.

 N. B.—Persons desiring the right to make and sell this Safe, may address as above.

A VALUABLE INVENTION.

We were shown yesterday, by Mr. Ashley, of this State, a small-sized "MARINE FLOATING SAFE," intended to preserve ships' books, money or other valuable matters, in case of loss at sea. It is calculated to float with any required weight, from 500 pounds and upwards, for any length of time, and is perfectly impervious to wet, or moisture. It is composed of a large number of airtight compartments, so that should any half dozen of them be punctured by floating spars, or other pointed substance, it would affect its buoyancy in no serious degree, and would be conspicuous at a great distance to any passing vessel. We have examined this Safe very carefully, and believe it to be a most valuable invention. The amount of SPECIE, JEWELS, and other valuables, annually lost, by the wreck of vessels, as all well know, reaches the sum of MILLIONS; all of which might be saved by the use of this important invention. In the loss of the "Atlantic" on Lake Erie, in the summer of 1855, the Adams Express Company lost its case, or chest, containing $70,000 in specie. Had the money been placed in one of these Safes, the Company would have been spared the great expense to which they were subjected, in raising their property from the wreck. But besides this, money cannot always be recovered, as this was, and is, therefore, of course, entirely lost.

We were also shown, in connection with the Safe, the model of a "VERTICAL FLOATING BERTH," the principle of which can easily be applied to the furniture of a steamer, or any other vessel. Each berth is capable of sustaining at least two persons; and from the nature of its construction, will maintain its upright position when in the water. They may also be lashed together by spars to any extent, and in this way compose a raft, or rafts, capable of sustaining any ship's company. In the case of the steamship "Arctic," lost in mid-ocean, some two years since, and which was five hours in settling, had these berths been in use on board that ill-starred ship, the whole number of the lost might have easily been saved. We heartily recommend both of these inventions to ship owners, underwriters and Express Companies, as things of uncommon value.—New Haven Morning Journal and Courier.

BOSTON STEREOTYPE FOUNDRY.

ESTABLISHED IN 1822.

The attention of authors, booksellers, printers, engravers,—and all who are interested in printing of any description,—is called to the unusual facilities possessed by the Boston Stereotype Foundry for the application of whereby duplicates of wood cuts, type work, or steel engraving, can be produced in copper, equal, in every respect, to the original.

The proprietors of the above Foundry were the first in the country to introduce electrotypes to any extent, and can confidently refer to publishers and printers to corroborate their claims to superiority in this particular branch of their business. By reason of their large fonts of type, they are prepared to contract for works of any magnitude, and, as a guarantee of style and accuracy, would refer to the plates of numerous works which have emanated from their establishment, among which may be mentioned the Dictionaries of Worcester and Webster.

New and tasteful type and borders are being constantly added to their already extensive assortment in the jobbing department, thereby enabling them at all times to meet the different styles demanded. Orders for electrotypes of bill-heads, cards, tags, spool tickets,—in fact, labels of every description,—are respectfully solicited.

A Silber Medal and Diploma were lately awarded by the Massachusetts Charitable Mechanic Association to the Boston Stereotype Foundry for electrotypes contributed to their Fair.

Prompt attention will be given to all communications or orders addressed to Y.; 79 Fourth street, St. Louis, Mo.; 3 Albany street, Troy, N. Y., and in all of the principal places of the United States.

These Machines have been before the public sufficiently long to test them thoroughly. Thousands of them are in use throughout the country, and are their own recommendation. We refer confidently to those using them. They are adapted to every part of Family Sewing, stitching, sewing, quilting, gathering, hemming, &c., with a strength and beauty unequalled by hand work. They do the work of twelve persons, making from 1,200 to 2,000 stitches per minute.

They are indispensable to Seamstresses, Tailors, Dressmakers, Manufacturers of Shirts, Collars, Silks, Linens, Woolen and Cotton goods, &c.

They make the double thread lock or "shuttle-stitch," the only stitch that cannot be raveled.

Their superiority consists in elegance of model and finish, simplicity and thoroughness of construction, lightness and rapidity of operation, easy management, quiet movement, economy of thread, firmness and durability of seam that will not rip or ravel, and is of equal beauty upon both sides.

An examination of these Machines, and specimens of their work, is respectfully solicited. Send for the Company's circular.
